Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented a joint resolution of the legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Senate joint resolution No. 28.]

Whereas it is the sense of this legislature of the State of Wisconsin that the public welfare demands that United States Senators should be elected by direct vote of the people; and

Whereas the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States has on four separate occasions passed by a two-thirds vote a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people; and

Whereas the United States Senate has refused to consider or vote upon said resolution, thereby denying to the people of the several States a chance to secure this imperatively needed change in the method of electing Senators; and

Whereas such opportunity to amend the Constitution of the United States may be obtained by united action of the legislatures of the several States under and pursuant to the provisions of Article V of the Constitution of the United States, calling for a convention to propose such amendment: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate and assembly of the State of Wisconsin, That, under authority of Article V of the Constitution of the United States, application is hereby made to Congress to forthwith call a constitutional convention for the purpose of submitting to the States for ratification an amendment to the Federal Constitution providing for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people; and, further, be it

Resolved, That the legislatures of all other States of the United States now in session, or when next convened, be, and they are respectfully, requested to join in this application by the adoption of this or an equivalent resolution; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit authentic copies of this resolution and application to the President of the United States, to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and to the several members of said bodies representing this State therein, and also to transmit copies hereof to the legislatures of all other States of the United States.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented a joint resolution of the legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Memorial to Congress requesting Congress to make an appropriation to defray the necessary expenses of a survey or other work, and to report upon the advisability of building a ship canal to connect the Great Lakes with the Mississippi River via Portage City, in Columbia County, Wis.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

Whereas the present failure of the transportation companies to keep pace with the wonderful commercial development of the country, and more especially of the great Northwest, has become a question of national importance; and

Whereas efforts have been made and modes suggested from time to time to connect the Great Lakes with the Mississippi River by the way of Chicago and the Illinois River with a ship canal; and

Whereas we believe a deep waterway between the Great Lakes and the Gulf of Mexico by way of the Mississippi River would be a great advantage to the country at large and to the State of Wisconsin, and would connect the Northwest and the markets of the world; and

Whereas the most natural, favorable, and cheapest route for such canal is through the Fox and Wisconsin rivers, via Portage City, Wis., and as such improvement is for the benefit of the whole people and not merely for the people of our State: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That our Representatives in Congress are hereby requested to use every endeavor to secure an appropriation to defray the expenses of a competent survey, to be made along the Fox and Wisconsin rivers route via Portage City, and that special attention be given that portion of the route between Portage City and the Mississippi River in order to determine whether the improvement of the Wisconsin River or the digging of a canal would give the best results: Be it further

Resolved, That the governor is requested immediately to transmit a copy of this memorial to the President of the United States, to the presiding officers of the Senate and House of Representatives, and to our Wisconsin Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Whereas the present Dingley law has been on the statute books of the United States for a period of nearly ten years without material change; and

Whereas this period has been one of greatest industrial and financial development, and owing to the unprecedented development of the nation, resulting from this protective policy, economic conditions have so changed that many of the schedules in said law are acknowledged to be detrimental to the best interests of the country: Be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That we memorialize the President of the United States that he call a special session of Congress as soon as possible after March 4, 1907, to revise the existing tariff law to harmonize with the present industrial and economic conditions; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing be immediately transmitted by the secretary of state to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and each of the Senators and Representatives from this State.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, with the indulgence of the Senate, I desire to say that the first section of the bill just introduced is a practical reenactment of the act of January 26, 1907. That act provides that it shall be unlawful to have a money contribution made by certain corporations. It occurs to me that that is too narrow an expression, and that it may be evaded by contributing other things than money. The first section of this proposed act endeavors to cover that omission, if indeed it be an omission.

The second section provides for the publication, by a report to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in Presidential elections of campaign contributions which may be lawfully made. The latter section does not go as far perhaps as it is desired to go with reference to the matter of campaign funds, nor does it go as far as I myself would go, but I submit it in this form to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with the hope that if the committee agree to the general purpose of the bill it may be perfected at least and reported to the Senate favorably.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

OFFICES FOR IMMIGRATION COMMISSION.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I submit a concurrent resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Immigration Commission, created by section 39 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved February 20, 1907, is hereby authorized to rent offices in the District of Columbia, at an expense not to exceed $2,500 per annum, to be paid as provided in said act and section.

Mr. BACON. Is that a joint resolution?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is a concurrent resolution, proposed by the Senator from Vermont. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent for its present consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to have the Senator from Vermont explain the necessity for the passage of this resolution, if there is any necessity for it.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. There is a provision of law that commissions appointed by act of Congress shall not have authority to rent real estate for the purpose of carrying on office work without the consent of Congress if it is situated in the District of Columbia.

The Immigration Commission, appointed under the authority of Congress, is authorized to carry on its investigation and to incur all necessary expenses for that purpose. Undoubtedly it would be authorized to rent an office in New York if it saw fit, but under that provision of law it can not do it in the District of Columbia. The work of the Commission now is that of investigating home conditions, and it involves a considerable amount of statistical work by a number of employees of the lower grades, and they need space for doing the work.

Mr. BACON. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator. From hearing the resolution read I could not accurately determine in my own mind whether it is an appropriation of money for this purpose.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It is to authorize the Commission to rent proper offices for the purpose of carrying on the work of the Commission. I will say in explanation that my reason for asking immediate action on the resolution is that the family of the late Senator Morgan desire to rent for this purpose the house occupied by him at the time of his death. Members of the Commission have examined the premises, and they find them admirably suited to the work of the Commission. The building can be secured at a very reasonable rental, and the reason, as I said, for asking immediate action is that the members of the Commission may be enabled to close the contract as they see fit.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, the point of my inquiry is whether this can be done by a concurrent resolution or whether a joint resolution is not necessary?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no.

Mr. BACON. If it appropriates money, it undoubtedly requires a joint resolution.

Mr. LODGE. The money is appropriated out of the immigration fund for all the expenses of the Commission. This is simply to allow them to rent quarters in the District of Columbia. It makes no appropriation.

Mr. BACON. The resolution does not propose to appropriate the money?

Mr. LODGE. No. Any expenses which the Commission may think it necessary to incur are already appropriated for.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It comes out of the immigration fund.

Mr. BACON. As I stated, I did not understand from the reading of the resolution whether it proposed to appropriate money. If an appropriation were necessary, undoubtedly a joint resolution would be required.

Mr. LODGE. It appropriates no money.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

ISSUE OF BONDS AND CERTIFICATES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from yesterday, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CULBERSON on the 4th instant, as modified by him yesterday, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with an abstract of the proposals received by him for the Panama bonds and 3 per cent certificates, authorized by order of the President November 18, 1907, and to inform the Senate what amount of the issue of said bonds and said 3 per cent certificates have been issued and to whom they have been awarded.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the resolution just read, presented by the Senator from Texas, provides for an inquiry into one or two of the various measures recently adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury to avert or relieve a financial crisis in New York and elsewhere. It is the purpose and desire of the Committee on Finance that an inquiry shall be promptly made into all the phases, and all facts with reference to all measures of relief then adopted, and the reasons for their adoption.

I suggest to the Senator from Texas that if he will permit this resolution to go to the Committee on Finance that committee will report back as soon as possible, and within a few days, at least, a general resolution providing for a general inquiry into all the facts with reference to the various phases of relief and to the various acts of the Secretary of the Treasury in connection therewith.

I believe this course should be more satisfactory to all Senators who have the purpose of ascertaining the precise facts, and that purpose is certainly shared by every member of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that the Secretary may read the subsequent resolution offered by myself. I introduced two resolutions on the 4th instant.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the second resolution submitted by Mr. CULBERSON on the 4th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate:

First. The total number of national banks in operation October 1, 1907, and November 18, 1907, in each State and Territory of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and the aggregate capital stock and unimpaired surplus of such banks in each of said States and Territories and the District of Columbia at that time.

Second. The total amount of public money on deposit in said banks in each of said States and Territories and the District of Columbia October 1, 1907, and November 18, 1907.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, it will be observed that these two resolutions taken together make three inquiries of the Secretary of the Treasury. One relates to the number of national banks organized at certain times and the aggregate capital and unimpaired surplus of those banks in each of the several States of the Union. The second branch of the resolution just read inquires as to the amount of public money on deposit in those banks in each of the States of the Union on the dates named. The resolution before the Senate directs that the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to the Senate an abstract of the proposals for the bonds issued under the Panama Canal act and, under the recent order of the President, as to 3 per cent certificates, and also as to whom they have been awarded.

If the Senator from Rhode Island will assure me that there will be reported from the Committee on Finance in a day or two a resolution which will bring forth an answer to the several inquiries I have made in these resolutions, I have no objection to their reference now to that committee.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will say to the Senator from Texas that I did assure the Senate, and I now repeat, that the matter will be taken up immediately by the Committee on Finance, at a meeting to be held in a day or two, at the convenience of the minority members of the committee, and that a resolution will be reported which will include all the inquiries asked for by the Senator from Texas and other Senators, and also have in view the ascertainment of all the facts with reference to recent Treasury transactions in New York and elsewhere.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is entirely satisfactory, Mr. President, to me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from Texas will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

FINANCIAL STATISTICS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CLAY on the 4th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to report to the Senate the name and location of each and every national bank designated as a United States depository, together with the total amount of money deposited in each of said banks by the United States during the year 1907.

He is also directed to report the total amount of money deposited in each of said banks by States at the present time; also the bonded indebtedness of the United States, the rate of interest said indebtedness bears, and he is directed to report what amount of said indebtedness the United States is at liberty to pay off before maturity and the amount of surplus in the Treasury of the United States, which shall include the amount of cash now on hand and the amount deposited in national banks.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the same action may be taken on this resolution.

Mr. CLAY. With the statement made by the Senator from Rhode Island that the Committee on Finance will meet this week and report a resolution covering these facts, showing the transactions of the Treasury Department during the present year, I am willing to have the resolution go to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CLAY. One moment, Mr. President.

I understand there are now about $250,000,000 of surplus deposited in the national banks, and most of it has been on deposit during the present year. I do not believe we can justify a course that collects from the American people $250,000,000 by taxation and places it in the Treasury of the United States, and then deposits it in banks without any interest, to loan it, the same money, belonging to the people, to the American people. I believe that that system of finance ought to be investigated and condemned.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the first resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. TILLMAN, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to investigate and report to the Senate—

First. Whether the issue of the certificates of indebtedness, bearing 3 per cent interest, bids for which were invited by the Secretary of the Treasury on November 18, 1907, were for the purpose of borrowing money to "meet public expenditures," as provided by section 32 of the act approved June 13, 1898, and if not, whether there is any warrant of law for the issue of said certificates.

Second. Whether the issue of fifty million of bonds of the Panama Canal loan, bids for which were called for by the Secretary of the Treasury on November 18, 1907, was required to "defray the expenditures" on said canal, there being at the time when both of these loans were made upward of $200,000,000 in the Treasury for current expenditures.

Third. Whether there is any legislation necessary to protect the people and business interests of the country from the issue of unlawful money, if clearing-house certificates are such, and to prevent the illegal increase of the public debt in time of peace.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, after what has been said by the chairman of the Committee on Finance and some little conference had in the committee itself this morning, I of course expect this resolution and the other one which I offered to go to that committee. But I ask unanimous consent that these resolutions may lie on the table without losing their places until I can gather the material which I have been looking for to present some of the reasons why I offer them. I make that request of the Senate, that the two resolutions shall lie over until such time as I may call them up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 1 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 11, 1907, at 12 o'clock meridian.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 550) providing for stated leaves of absence to entrymen under the homestead laws, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 566) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia, to report it back and ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. That committee had jurisdiction of a similar bill in the last Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GAMBLE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 415) regulating the settlement of the accounts between the United States and the several States relative to the disposition of the public lands, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

J. C. CRAIN.

Mr. McLAURIN. I am authorized by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1037) for the relief of J. C. Crain, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes J. C. Crain to file in the United States land office at Jackson, Miss., his application for a patent to any 120 acres of the public land in the State of Mississippi not patented prior to the filing of the application, and provides that if it do not appear from the records of the land office that some other person is claiming the same it shall be the duty of the register and receiver to so certify to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who shall cause a patent to be issued therefor to J. C. Crain.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

SARAH E. SEWARD.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. BULKELEY on the 9th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Sarah E. Seward, widow of William Todd Seward, late a messenger in the employ of the Senate of the United States, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

ADDITIONAL CLERK FOR COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. KEAN. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] on the 4th instant, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration. I will state, in explanation of the resolution, that it is the same employment the Committee on Indian Affairs had during the last session of Congress.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be authorized to employ an additional clerk until the close of first session Sixtieth Congress, who shall be paid at the rate of $120 per month out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

LELIA V. WALLACE.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate reconsider the vote by which resolution No. 24 was passed on the 9th instant.

Mr. GALLINGER. What is the resolution?

Mr. KEAN. It is a resolution in regard to the compensation of a widow, and in it the name is wrong. I move a reconsideration merely to correct the name.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered. The resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. KEAN. In line 3 of the resolution I move to substitute for "Lydia G." the words "Lelia V.," so as to read "Lelia V. Wallace."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate, to Lelia V. Wallace, widow of Sandy Wallace, late a laborer in the employ of the Senate of the United States, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

DRAFTS OF BILLS FROM EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the proceedings at this time and have unanimous consent, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to some matters that appear upon the face of this morning's RECORD with reference to the introduction of bills, which, so far as I am advised, are of rather an unusual character.

I would call the attention of the Senate to the paragraph in this morning's RECORD, on page 1, which reads as follows:

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of a bill to authorize the leasing of irrigable allotted lands, the lands reserved for the use of the Indians in common, for agricultural purposes, etc., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

I am not advised of any rule of the Senate or of any law under which the Secretary of the Interior may introduce a bill into the Senate of the United States and have it referred, read, or printed.

I find that on the first page of this morning's RECORD there are quite a large number of such instances. I should like to inquire by what authority the head of a Department of the executive branch of the Government may introduce, either directly or indirectly, into this body a proposed measure of legislation of any kind, whether it be a resolution or a bill. It seems to me opportune at this time to interpose the inquiry, that I may be advised as to the rule and the authority for such a proceeding.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that according to the practice which has prevailed heretofore such matters are in the nature of communications from the heads of Departments; that they go to the committee having jurisdiction over the subject to which they relate simply as matters of information, and the committee report them back in the shape of original bills if they see fit.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I understand that under the rules of the Senate it is the privilege of any member at any time to object to the introduction of a bill. Bills are introduced only with the consent, or by the permission, of this body, and I can see some danger in any rule or practice which permits a Department to introduce a bill in this method, which deprives any member of the body of an opportunity to object to the bill being read a first or second time. These bills go to the appropriate committee; they go to the committee indirectly from the executive branch of the Government, and I think it will appear that on some occasions in the past they have been reported back in substantially the same shape that they were presented to the body. I think that all bills which are referred should be read the first and second times, and that all matters which go to a committee should go there under the rules of the Senate. I, for one, desire to enter a protest against thus indirectly admitting anyone not a member of this body to the privilege of introducing bills and having them referred to committees.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho as to the utter impropriety of any attempt on the part of anyone to introduce a bill into the Senate save and except a Senator is very appropriate as a criticism; but I doubt its application to the case he has presented or to any similar case.

It is customary for the head of a Department to send communications to the Senate on any subject within the jurisdiction of the Department. Such communications may suggest the need for remedial legislation as disclosed in the ordinary course of administration. Such suggestion may be made frequently in more cogent and intelligent form by presenting not a bill, but the thought crystallized into a proposed bill. The bill is not read the first and second times in the Chamber, nor is it introduced as a bill in the Senate. It accompanies the communication from the head of the Department in the way of explanatory matter, showing in terse form just how the thought sought to be incorporated into law could be, according to the Department's idea, clearly expressed. It is frequently easier to express in the form of proposed legislation the object sought to be accomplished than it is to attempt to do the same thing by the extensive use of language in a descriptive way.

Mr. ALDRICH rose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CARTER. Most assuredly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Do I understand the Senator from Montana to say that any Department has the right or that it is the custom to send communications to Congress asking for legislation without the recommendation being transmitted by the President? The Secretary of the Treasury is ordered by law to make reports to Congress, but I know of no other heads of Departments who have ever asked Congress to legislate upon their suggestion. All their suggestions are transmitted to the President of the United States and should come to this body from him. I can not understand how there could be any orderly transaction of business otherwise. We should have every head of Department and perhaps every subordinate of a Department sending bills here to be introduced upon all sorts of subjects, if that were so. I think it is manifestly improper for the head of a Department to send a communication to Congress asking for legislation unless it is transmitted by the President of the United States or in answer to a request.

Mr. BACON. Or unless it is asked for by Congress.

Mr. ALDRICH. Or unless it is asked for by Congress.

Mr. CARTER. Under the Constitution and the law the President and Secretary of the Treasury, the one communicating on the state of the Union and the other furnishing estimates, are the two officers of the Executive Department recognized as the proper parties to communicate with Congress on proposed legislation or to submit matters for legislation.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; that is right.

Mr. CARTER. I challenge the attention of the Senator to my language, which was that it has become the custom, frequently indulged by the heads of Departments, to send communications directly to Congress without being invited so to do.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have never known a case of that kind in my experience in the Senate. It has not occurred within the lines of thought I have had anything to do with, and if it has been done, it seems to me that it is time it was stopped, because, to my mind, it is manifestly improper.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the question of the custom is readily settled by a consultation of the record of the Senate. The point raised by the Senator from Idaho was that there is something inherently objectionable in submitting the outline of a proposed bill. I do not attempt to settle the question of the propriety of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior to this body unsolicited, but if such a practice is warranted either by custom or by the sufferance of the Senate, it is not made obnoxious by the fact that it is submitted in the form of a proposed measure embodying the kind of legislation sought, because it is not the introduction of a bill. It is the submission of a report, and the bill is not introduced until it is brought in by a committee or by a Senator.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order.

Mr. ALDRICH subsequently entered a motion to reconsider the reference to the Committee on Indian Affairs of sundry drafts of bills transmitted by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to state that the five bills which have just been read by their titles are bills which were sent to me by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. Most of the bills that I introduce come from that source, and they are cheerfully introduced for the purpose of referring them to the committee.

As chairman of that committee I am in receipt of numerous communications from residents of the District in reference to the bills I introduce, asking concerning them and whether or not I approve of them. I think it is an opportune time to say that as a rule the bills which I introduce are, as I have already stated, bills prepared by the Commissioners, and in introducing them the chairman does not commit himself in any way concerning them, but sends them to the committee, where they are given consideration. One of the bills introduced this morning is of an unusual character, and the chairman would be very loath to comit himself to it in advance.

SUPPRESSION OF POOLS, TRUSTS, AND COMBINATIONS IN TRADE.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask that Senate bill 100 be now laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill referred to by the Senator from Arkansas, which will be read by its title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 100) to suppress pools, trusts, and combinations in trade, and to provide penalties for violations of its provisions, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to make a few remarks on the general subject embraced in the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, it was not my purpose when I entered this honorable body to retain my seat in silence, if possible, until my hair should have grown gray in service, until I had grown out of the knowledge of my constituents and lost my identity with them. It was my ambition, sir, to present quickly, fearlessly, forcefully, and as intelligently as I might, some of the living and vital questions which are to-day before the American people and in which they are deeply and vitally interested. I know of no question, sir, before the American people that lies closer to their great throbbing hearts than that question the proper solution of which is in this bill under consideration.

Mr. President, it would be useless for me, in this body of eminent lawyers, to attempt a strict legal definition of a trust, but I shall content myself, sir, with that common, everyday definition known and understood of all men—that is, any combination of capital having for its object and purpose the restraint of trade or the fixing of prices.

Ah, sir, the question before the American people to-day is, Is a trust a good thing? If it is, Mr. President, then in the name of the toiling masses of the earth, in the name of the men upon whose shoulders the burdens of government rest, I ask that we have more of them. If they are bad things, then in the name of the power that is vested in this body and in the Congress of the United States, I ask, sir, that trusts be suppressed; that trusts be destroyed. The object and purpose of this bill is indicated in its title, which shows the purpose for which the bill is framed; that is that trusts, pools, conspiracies, and combinations in restraint of trade and unlawful attempts to fix prices be suppressed, be destroyed.

Mr. President, the bill speaks for itself. Without reading it at length, how plain, how simple are its terms. Section 1 of the bill provides, in short, that any corporation organized under the laws of the United States of America, or under the laws of any other country, and transacting any kind of interstate or international business in the United States of America, that shall become a member of any pool or any trust, shall be subject to the penalties prescribed by this bill and come under its prohibitions.

Ah, Mr. President, this is a simple bill, but it is far-reaching. Its consequences can not be in a short discussion of this kind foretold. I am told that perhaps the bill would not accomplish the purposes sought. I assert, sir, most emphatically, that if this bill becomes a law and is honestly and intelligently enforced, it will suppress trusts. What is the language of the bill? "Any corporation." Does not that include them all? Organized where? Anywhere in the United States of America or in any country on earth. That shall do what? That shall engage in or become a member of any pool or any trust for the purpose of fixing prices unlawfully shall come within the pains and under the penalties of this bill. Sir, do not the words "any trust" embrace all trusts organized anywhere in this land or elsewhere? I say that this bill reaches the desired result. What is the result desired? To kill trusts.

I shall not enter into any long dissertation upon the origin of trusts or the cause of their origin. It suffices to say that trusts are here, that trusts are with us. How can they be destroyed? Why should they not be destroyed? Shall they be permitted to run riot in this land?

Mr. President, section 2 of this bill provides that in the case of a violation of its provisions by a domestic corporation organized under the laws of the United States we shall take away their charter rights to transact business in this country, and in case of violation by a foreign corporation the bill prohibits it entering upon our shores. Have we the power to do that? Is there a lawyer on this floor—I challenge him to the contest—is there a lawyer on this floor who would deny the right of this Government to say to a home corporation, "If you engage in this kind of business we will take from you your charter; we will take from you your corporate rights to do business?" Can any man deny that this Government, in its sovereign capacity, has the right to say to a foreign corporation engaged in an unlawful conspiracy to fix prices, "You shall not come into our country?"

Ah, sir, the Chinaman by the law of the United States is prohibited from coming to our shores, and any foreigner may be restricted in his rights and subjected to the restrictions of human society. Then, sir, if a man made in the image of God can be met at the very borders of our country and told that he shall not cross the border line, I ask why it is that it may be insisted that we have no power to stop a corporation—a creature of the law—a law-made creature—that we can not stop them there? That would be strange indeed. If we have the power, as undeniably we have, then will some Senator representing the majority on this floor have the kindness to tell me why we do not do it?

It may be said that we have a sufficient antitrust law; that the Sherman Act of 1890 is amply sufficient to meet this emergency. Is that true? Ah, Mr. President, I have only to quote you the language of Judge Grosscup, one of the most eminent jurists upon the Republican side in this land, who recently made a speech in Columbus, Ind., in which he said that if we but call the list of all the great so-called "trusts" organized since the passage of the Sherman Act we would be calling the list of all the great trusts and corporations of the day. Judge Grosscup asked the pertinent question, "Have wages been increased or has the cost of living been reduced by the efforts at enforcement of the Sherman law?" He said "No." Mr. President, can his word be disputed; can this statement be denied? Has there been an honest and effective effort to crush a single trust under the Sherman Act? If there has been, will the majority lay their hand on it? If you have crippled one, tell me where you hit it? You have not even crippled a trust; you have not lamed a trust, and you have not disturbed a trust.

Mr. President, the bill which I here propose intends to wipe trusts off the face of the earth. You have the power to do it. Let the Democrats in this body, let the men from the South and the West stand by me in this contest, and I promise you that this bill shall not be lacking in effectiveness, neither shall it take the course that has been the fate of other trust bills, sleeping the sleep that knows no waking in committee rooms. Mr. President, I am in earnest upon this subject. I mean what I say.

Senators, what are some of the other features of this bill?

The further down into the bill you get the better it is; the deeper you dig, the more sound Democratic doctrine you find.

Who created the trusts? What were the causes which led to their formation? Before the Industrial Commission appointed by Congress for that purpose, Mr. Smith, in summing up the testimony of the witnesses there, took the testimony first, of Mr. Havemeyer, the great sugar king. Mr. Havemeyer is dead and has gone to his reward; whether a good or bad one I do not know; but at least, Mr. President, he has gone to that place and clime where St. Peter don't take sugar in his'n. [Laughter.]

Mr. Havemeyer said in the testimony before this Commission that the tariff was the immediate and prime cause of the formation of trusts.

Mr. Gates, the great wire king of the country, said that his trust was formed on wire that they might become the wire manufacturers of the world. They all say that it is done to shut out competition; that it is done to throttle trade. Then, sir, if the trusts were formed for that purpose, you have shut them out, you have not killed them by the Sherman law.

Let us take this bill and consider it and see whether it is effective, whether it will accomplish the purpose. Section 6 of the bill provides that a corporation organized for the purpose of forming a trust shall not sell goods for nothing; that they shall not sell them at a cost less than the cost of production; that they shall not give them away; that they shall not sell them in such a way as to injure legitimate competition; that they shall not sell them in one section of the country at a less price than in another section of the country. Is there anything wrong in that, Mr. President? Is there any Senator upon the majority side of this great body who can point to me any wrong in that provision? If there is, let me hear it. We say to these corporations you can not do what? You can not sell goods at less than the cost of manufacture; you shall not give them away; you shall not sell them in one section of the country at a less price than in another section of the country; you shall not do any act that will injure legitimate competition.

Sir, I can only cite you to an instance in my own State. A local company in our capital city of Little Rock was selling oil at 10 cents a gallon in the city and 15 cents a gallon in the country. The Standard Oil Company, seeing that they were an independent concern and desiring to drive them out of the market, sent their oil to Little Rock, and these men saw bankruptcy staring them in the face. The Standard Oil Company began to sell oil at 6, at 4, at 3, at 2 cents a gallon, and these men, who were selling the independent oil, were forced out of existence. Immediately after that was done the Standard Oil Company placed the price of their oil not at the old price of 10 cents in the city and 15 cents in the country, but at 15 cents in the city and 25 cents in the country. My friends were driven out of business. Ah, sir, is that fair? Is it right? Will you sit here in your seats as Senators representing a sovereign constituency and allow these things to go on when you know that they are wrong? You can not fool the country. You may fool all the people a part of the time, you may fool a part of the people all the time, but you can not, thank God, fool all the people all the time. They know that the trusts are bad things; they know that you have the power to suppress them under proper legislation; and I place this burden on the shoulders of the majority in this body. What will you do, gentlemen? Will you pass this bill?

I do not contend that this bill is perfect. I do not contend that the bill is without fault or blemish. If there are defects in it, it can be amended in committee; but, sir, I say to you without fear of successful contradiction that there is not a lawyer within the sound of my voice who will seriously contend that there is a provision of the bill that does not strictly follow the law. We have the power to suppress trusts, and we can do it. Section 6 of the bill is worth its weight in gold.

What are the further provisions of the bill? It provides the manner of taking the testimony—a mere matter of detail which I shall not stop to enlarge upon. It provides that it shall be enforced by the Attorney-General of the United States and by the district attorneys of the various districts of the State in which the offense may be committed. It provides that in the case of a man who lives more than a hundred miles from the place of trial, his deposition may be taken. It provides for the appointment of commissions; for the procuring of books and evidence from the corporation itself, and provides, gentlemen, that if the testimony is withheld by the corporation after the notice provided in this bill is given, then the trial judge may dismiss the pleas that have been filed by the corporation and may render judgment by default against it.

Gentlemen, can this be done? I say it can. The law permits it. Then, why do you withhold it from the American people? When are we going to kill trusts, gentlemen? I will tell you. We are going to do it whenever we lay aside partisan feeling; whenever we lay aside partisan bickering and partisan bitterness and rise to the true standard of American manhood; when we get upon the broad plane of American citizenship, and work for the great good of the great common people. Then, and not until then, can we suppress trusts. We, the minority, recognize, gentlemen, that we are in your hands—in the hands of the majority. This bill is presented, and I ask for it your respectful consideration.

Section 2 of the bill is the best of all. It provides the penalties. The penalties provided by this section are these: Any corporation violating the act may be fined in any sum not less than $5,000 for each day's offense, and each day the offense shall be continued shall be considered a separate offense. More than that, Mr. President, it provides for a penitentiary sentence of not less than five nor more than twenty-one years for any man violating its solemn mandates. Ah, Mr. President, make this penalty the law. Even if you defeat the bill, if you refuse to consider it, if you trample it under your Senatorial feet, leave the penalty clause as a part of the Sherman law. Let the great trust magnates of the land understand, sir, that they are not above the law; that the strong arm of the law can reach them, and that the strong arm of the law will reach them. Prosecute them just like you would any other felons; prosecute them just like you would an ordinary horse thief. The man who steals your horse commits a very small injury to your property, indeed, but the man who, under the trust process, grinds and oppresses and destroys American manhood and shuts the door of opportunity to millions and millions of men does a wrong and an injury, Mr. President, that can not be compensated in mere fines. Put them in the penitentiary.

Do you know the best object lesson to-day for the suppression of the trusts, sir, would be to see John D. Rockefeller or some fellow just like him with stripes on. That is strong language, but I mean it. Let every man, no matter who he is or how big he is, come under the law. If he violates it, place upon him felon's stripes, the doxology of a misspent life, and he will respect the law. Let no guilty man escape, Mr. President. Let the great American people understand that the law is made for all alike. Protect the weak man in his cabin and protect the great man in his castle, but protect all alike. I say the remedy, Mr. President, is to make the strong arm of the law reach out and get those who violate the law.

What next does this bill provide? It defines what is a monopoly and what is a trust. Without intending to read all of section 5, I shall read a portion of it so as to be entirely accurate. It says:

SEC. 5. That a monopoly or trust intended to be prohibited by this act is any union or combination or consolidation or affiliation of capital, credit, property, assets, trade, customs, skill, or acts, or any other valuable thing or possession, by or between persons, firms, or corporations, or associations of persons, firms, or corporations, whereby any one of the purposes or objects mentioned in this act is accomplished or sought to be accomplished, or whereby any one or more of said purposes are promoted or attempted to be executed or carried out, or whereby the several evil results mentioned herein are reasonably calculated to be produced, etc.

That defines what a monopoly is. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read the whole section, but the definition embraces all kinds of trusts.

Now, sir, I want to say that in my judgment the American people are looking to this Congress for some relief on this great question. Talk about the panic that is on hand. What is the cause of the panic? I shall not attempt to discuss that because it would not be germane to this question; but, sir, no longer can it be claimed by the Republican party of this nation that panics do not occur when the G. O. P. is in power. The people of this country to-day are aroused as they never have been stirred before.

Mr. Havemeyer says in his testimony, from which I have quoted, that the tariff is the mother of trusts and that the trusts are but reaping and gathering the benefits they have been enabled to gather by reason of the tariff. Ah, sir, if that is true, then the tariff, as he says, is the mother of trusts, and the trusts are reaping the benefit of the tariff. To-day, sir, we see the amazing spectacle of fifty-one men in the United States, beginning with John D. Rockefeller, owning $3,295,000,000 of the wealth of this country. In this connection, Mr. President, I ask leave to submit as a part of my remarks, to be printed as an appendix, a very carefully prepared manuscript upon this subject, giving a list of the fifty-one men in this great country of ours who have amassed large fortunes, and the amount that each one has amassed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to insert as a part of his remarks the statement referred to by him. In the absence of objection permission is granted.

The statement referred to is as follows:

THE RICHEST FIFTY-ONE IN THE UNITED STATES.

When the average present-day millionaire is bluntly asked to name the value of his earthly possessions, he finds it difficult to answer the question correctly. It may be that he is not willing to take the questioner into his confidence. It is doubtful whether he really knows.

If this is true of the millionaire himself, it follows that when others attempt the task of estimating the amount of his wealth the results must be conflicting. Still, excellent authorities are not lacking on this subject, and the list of the richest fifty-one persons in the United States has been satisfactorily compiled.

The following list is taken from Munsey's Scrap Book of June, 1906, and is a fair presentation of the property owned by fifty-one of the very richest men of the United States:

It will thus be seen that fifty-one persons in the United States, with a population of nearly 90,000,000 people, own approximately one thirty-fifth of the entire wealth of the United States. The Statistical Abstract of the United States, 29th number, 1906, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor of the United States, gives the estimated true value of all property in the United States for that year at $107,104,211,917.

Each of the favored fifty-one owns a wealth of somewhat more than $64,600,000, while each of the remaining 89,999,950 people get $1,100. No one of these fifty-one owns less than $20,000,000, and no one on the average owns less than $64,600,000. Men owning from $1,000,000 to $20,000,000 are no longer called rich men. There are approximately 4,000 millionaires in the United States, but the aggregate of their holdings is difficult to obtain. If all their holdings be deducted from the total true value of all the property in the United States, the average share of each of the other 89,995,000 people would be less than $500.

John Jacob Astor is reputed to have been the first American millionaire, although this is a matter impossible to decide. It is also claimed that Nicholas Longworth, of Cincinnati, the great grandfather of Congressman Longworth, was the first man west of the Allegheny Mountains to amass a million. It is difficult to prove either one of these propositions, but they prove that the age of the millionaire in the United States is a comparatively recent thing. In 1870 to own a single million was to be a very rich man; in 1890 it required at least $10,000,000, while to-day a man with a single million or even ten millions is not in the swim. To be enumerated as one of the world's richest men you must own not less than $20,000,000. The age of the multimillionaire began with the high tariff of the Republican party in 1897 and is now in the zenith of its glory. Havemeyer, of the sugar trust, in his sworn testimony before the Industrial Commission, said that the tariff was the mother of all the trusts, and everybody concedes that the trusts breed multimillionaires.

Mr. DAVIS. Government statistics, sir, show the true and total wealth of the 89,000,000 people of this country is, in round numbers, $107,000,000,000. Fifty-one men to-day own $3,295,000,000 of this amount, or one thirty-fifth of the entire wealth of the country. This does not include men who own simply a million dollars' worth of property. Men who to-day own not more than a million dollars are poor men indeed. In 1870, sir, a man was a rich man if he was a millionaire. In 1890 the standard had moved up and it required $10,000,000 to be counted in the swim; but to-day, sir, a man is not considered a rich man unless he owns at least $20,000,000.

Take the fifty-one men—trust magnates, if you please, men who have grown rich by these processes—owning $3,295,000,000 of the wealth of the country; add to that the wealth of the other 4,000 millionaires who own as much as a million dollars each, but not so much as $20,000,000, and you have, sir, an appalling state of affairs. These men own about 87½ per cent of the wealth of the country. The common, ordinary, every-day man of the 89,000,000 people living under this great Government owns, on an average, less than $500 in property. You ask, Is that true? Ah, your own statistics show it. Can you answer to the country why and how this occurred?

Sir, what is money that it has grown so priceless? Money is simply a means to an end. This is a day of commercialism. The country has gone wild about money. This is a day, Mr. President, when gold is placed above God and money is placed above men, when we would sell our souls, our Government, our all for dollars. There is a mad desire to get money, and everybody has the fever.

Sir, there is some trouble somewhere. What is that trouble? Happy, indeed, and beneficial to mankind will be the man who can solve the problem, diagnose the case, and apply the remedy.

Mr. President, our fathers, when they framed this Government more than a hundred years ago, embarked in an unknown undertaking. They embarked upon a sea without rudder and without compass. They had neither precedent nor example. They intended to form a government that should be a simple government, that should be a pure government, that should be a government, indeed, of the people, for the people, and by the people. But, sir, is that the condition prevailing to-day? Mr. Lincoln, the great patron saint of the Republican party—God bless his memory—in his latter days spoke a great truth when, looking down upon this Government from his lofty height in the travail of his soul, he said, "I see an era approaching which gives me more concern than did the civil war. I see a period approaching when all the wealth of the country will be concentrated in the hands of a few, and when that day shall arrive I tremble, sir, for the Republic itself." I do not quote Mr. Lincoln exactly, but that is the substance of what he said.

Mr. President, I am not an alarmist. I am not a socialist. Neither am I an anarchist. But I stand here to-day to tell you that there is something wrong—radically wrong. This is not the government handed down to us by our fathers. The old ship of state has drifted far from her moorings, and unless we tow her back to the old-time democratic simplicity, I stand here to-day to tell you, sir, that we are upon the very threshold of a national calamity.

Who was the greatest President, save and except George Washington, that this country ever had? I say without fear of successful contradiction that Old Hickory, Old Blue Jeans, was the greatest President this country ever produced. When he was sworn in as Chief Executive of this great nation, he came to the White House on horseback. He rode his horse out here, hitched it to a rack, and, dressed in a suit of blue jeans, walked into the White House and took the oath of office. How simple was that ceremony! How plain! If a man should do that to-day, he would be called crazy. To-day there is too much gloss, there is too much glitter, there is too much gold, there is too much tinsel. If things continue for another quarter of a century as they have for the past twenty-five years, the statesmen of America will be wearing knee breeches with brass buckles, and powdered wigs, and when they go to the White House will be bowing down to semiroyalty.

We are going too fast. The world is moving too fast. We want to get money. Gold is god. Sir, what did the last Congress appropriate for the current expenses of this Government? If I remember the figures correctly, $900,000,000 or thereabout. Nine hundred million dollars! Sirs, this is a sum of money which staggers the human mind to contemplate. Nine hundred million dollars! If you were to pile it up on this floor and let my good-looking young friend, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] start to count it, and let him count $2 a minute, and let him work as strenuously as the Senate itself works, he would be old as Methuselah before he could count half the money. Nine hundred million dollars appropriated to run the Government! Too much money, Mr. President.

What else occurred? In addition to the ordinary appropriation for the President's salary, $50,000, you gave him $25,000 to ride over the country on business trips and otherwise. I speak of the President in most respectful terms. You not only did that, but you gave him sixty or seventy thousand dollars for something else—I do not know for what purposes—and altogether it takes about $120,000 to support our distinguished President and his family. While I have the greatest admiration for Mr. Roosevelt, I understand he has only five children. I have him skinned a city block. [Laughter.] I have eight children, and it does not take $120,000 to support me and my family.

Mr. President, why do I mention these things? To show the trend of the times; to show how the old ship of state is sailing; to show how gold is god. Sir, money to-day is all powerful. You know, every one of you knows, that it opens the door of opportunity to all men; that the lack of it locks the door of opportunity to all. It opens the door to society and great functions. In some instances I am sorry to say that the doors of the church itself are not opened so widely and so gladly to men in tatters and rags as they are to the man with money. Money is powerful. Everybody respects money. Whether a fellow ever expects to get a dollar or not he looks at it with awe and trembling. He walks up to it with a great deal of fear. He doffs his hat and tosses it high in the air at the sight of this great monster.

You say, sir, this bill is radical; this bill is extreme; it will tear up the business interests of the country; it will destroy confidence; it will ruin the Republic. I pause to ask the question, Will you destroy the Republic or will you destroy the trusts? "Choose you this day whom ye will serve," whether God or Mammon. Are you going to serve the trusts or are you going to serve the people? "Wake up." Sir, disturb business relations; disturb business conditions. If it is necessary to save the Republic, I say disturb anything, disturb anybody.

I know, sir, that business is easily frightened. I know, sir, that money is timid. I know, sir, that there are a great many interests in this country that do not want any radical changes; that would rather submit supinely and let present conditions alone, no matter how harmful or how hurtful, than to disturb business conditions. The cry of disturbing financial conditions and business relations is too often the shield behind which cowardly public servants hide themselves when they are called upon to face an outraged constituency. You say the bill is too drastic, too strong; it would really accomplish the intended purpose if it is passed; it would really destroy the trusts. Can anything be too strong that will reach the seat of this disease? The trust on the body politic is a cancerous sore just as is a similar sore on the human body. The only remedy is the surgeon's knife. Take it. Cut it out by the root. Destroy it before it destroys the human body. If a Senator on this floor should see his child, the loved one of his heart, in danger of being bitten by an adder, would he strike with fear, would he strike with trepidation? No, sir. He would strike to kill. He would strike to destroy. That is what this bill means; that is its object; that is its purpose. And I tell you, Mr. President, that if I could get the assistance, as I know I can, of the Democratic minority of this august body, the Senate shall not deride and put to sleep a bill that has for its object and purpose the destruction of this great evil. If there is any power in the Democratic minority, if there is any power left in Democratic Senators, this bill has got to be brought back here, if I can see that it is done or if the minority can. It has got to be reported, favorably or unfavorably, and it must be fought out on the floor.

Mr. President, I say there is something wrong. Our fathers did not intend this when they framed the Government. Let us stop and study the history of our Government for just a moment. Let us study its objects and purposes. Let us see just what the fathers did intend. Sir, they intended that the people should rule this country. They did not intend that the creatures of the law should rule. They intended that the sovereign people should be all powerful, and in their hands they vested all power except that which is especially delegated to Congress.

Our fathers started out in this matter of government making. They were on a rough sea, I say. Their course was upon unknown waters. But, thank God, they wrote a great declaration. They wrote the most immortal document that has ever been conceived by the human mind, or that was ever penned by the human hand. What was that declaration, Mr. President? What was that document? The great Declaration of Independence itself. That document declares certain immortal truths, the most important of which, in my judgment, are these: That document guarantees to us certain inalienable rights—rights that can not be transferred, rights that can not be alienated. These rights are life, liberty, and happiness. Did I quote that document correctly, Mr. President? No, gentlemen, I misquoted it purposely, that I might call your attention to its meaning. That great document declares that all men are created free and equal. When we come from the plastic hand of God we are all equal; none better, none greater than another. It declares that we are endowed with these inalienable rights—life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. I infer from that language that by "pursuit" our fathers meant that we might run after happiness; that we might chase happiness; that we might overtake it if we could.

Happiness, sir, is a condition desired by all men, whether rich or poor, whether high or low. That is the ultimate object; that is the highest and best ambition of man—happiness. Our fathers did not guarantee to us happiness itself. They guaranteed to us the right to pursue happiness. I infer that that meant a fair pursuit, that that meant a fair race, that that meant a fair chase. I ask you is that true in this Government to-day? It is not, Mr. President, in my humble judgment. The rich man's boy, the trust magnate's boy lies upon flowery beds of ease, while the boy of the laboring man from the very start of the race of life is handcuffed, manacled, and chained. I say the door of opportunity is not to-day open to all alike, as the law intended and as the law should be.

Go with me, please, to the shops and the field. Go with me to the laboring man. Wherever he goes to provide the necessities of life he is met by the taxgatherer, sent by the trust magnate. The cotton in my shirt is produced by a trust. The leather in the shoes of my good-looking friend, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], is produced by a trust. The wool in this coat is produced by a trust. Everything that one can imagine, whether a necessity, a comfort, or a charity, is in a trust. Sir, the Holy Bible itself is in a trust, and when you hear the Chaplain read from that blessed book every morning, he reads from a book made by a trust. Everything that I can imagine is in a trust except acorns and persimmons. Those are all that are left for the poor people of this country.

Mr. President, stop, study, and think where are we going, whither are we drifting, where is our Government tending? When the laboring man takes his bucket or his basket and goes to the beef shop to get his beef he pays tribute to Armour. When he goes to a wire or steel shop to get wire to make his fence or to get nails he pays tribute to the wire or the nail trust. When he goes to the coffin shop to get a coffin to bury his baby he pays tribute to the coffin trust. When he goes to church on Sunday he hears the word of the blessed God and listens to the divine doctrine expounded from a trust-made Bible. Has not the G. O. P. got this country in a nice mess—the wealth of the country concentrated in the hands of a few men, the great masses, the mighty millions, paying tribute! How true the declaration of Mr. Lincoln; how well he foresaw and foreshadowed coming events.

Mr. President, this is a great subject. Would that I had the power to handle it as it justly deserves. The people of this great country are long-suffering and patient. God bless the laboring man of the country. God bless the man upon whose shoulders rest the burdens of the Government. He bears its burdens in times of peace. He supports and defends it in time of war. God bless the man with the hickory shirt and the overalls, who works, toils, and sweats.

Mr. President, I find in Holy Writ that the Master says work is honorable. The Master says, "Go into the vineyard and work." I find nowhere, sir, a permission to go into the vineyard and corner all the grapes and become so rich and opulent that when the Master comes you can defy him and turn him from the garden.

Sir, stop, study, think. Whither is our Government drifting to-day? If the trust magnates are not wiped off the face of the earth; if they are not destroyed, instead of the Government prescribing the conditions upon which they may do business, they will be telling you directly how the Government shall do its business. Is that true or not? Mr. President, I hold in my hand a valuable document, being the speech of Mr. LITTLEFIELD, of Maine, giving all the great industrial trusts, with their capital, and I ask permission that it may be printed as a part of my remarks on this subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the document will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. LITTLEFIELD gives about 400 industrial trusts, with a capital amounting to something like $9,231,000,000. The trusts to-day are telling the Government how to do business instead of the Government telling the trusts how to do business. It is said that "we fined Mr. Rockefeller at Chicago in the great prosecution there." Yes; we did; and Mr. Rockefeller's testimony, if properly reported by the newspapers of the country, amused me very much. Mr. Rockefeller said, "I do not know just exactly whether I am in a trust or not. I do not know whether my business bears the earmarks of a trust or not. In fact, if your honor please, I have not been in my place of business for a number of years." Sir, if you will pass this bill, if you will enact this penalty, prescribing a penitentiary sentence of not less than five nor more than twenty-one years, Mr. Rockefeller will go down to his business place every morning. [Laughter.]

Fear of a penitentiary sentence is the most awakening thing on earth. It will wake up Mr. Rockefeller. He will go down and say, "Boys, let us see about this thing. Have you really got a trust here?" What does he care for $29,000,000? By one simple twist of the wrist, by one simple manipulation in the trust market, he grinds from the American people twice $29,000,000 and goes off smiling. He has the smile that never wears off. In order to ease his conscience he and some of the other trust magnates make large contributions to charities, thereby endeavoring to cover up the fact that they have taken the very money which they contribute from the toiling masses of the American people by a wrongful system of enforced contribution to their wealth. Sir, stop, study, think. The trusts are directing the Government to-day. The Government is not directing the trusts. We have but to go to the testimony of Mr. Harriman, the great railroad magnate, who tells us that he conributed $200,000 to the campaign fund in the last Presidential campaign. It is true Mr. Cortelyou denies it, but I take it that the evidence is indisputable. But the trusts of the country are dictating the terms, not the Government.

I hold in my hand a letter. I do not care to disclose its author, neither do I care to disclose to whom it is written, because it is a private communication; but it is from a banker in my State and was written to an eastern bank. He wants to know if he can get some money—a sum of money that the bank itself had deposited in the eastern bank as a reserve to draw against. The eastern bank replies—this letter is under date of November 23—"No; you can not get any money from us; not even your own money. Things are tight; things are close. But we will go out into the market, and we will buy you some money at 3 or 4 per cent premium."

Mr. President, stop and think of that for a minute. Eighty-nine millions of people—the greatest upon God's green earth—with a country abounding in natural resources that can not even be estimated or guessed at, much less computed; a brave, courageous, generous people, with a government established for their protection and their preservation, reduced to the mean and groveling necessity of going out and buying money—buying the thing which the Government should make; buying the thing which the Government should control—buying money! Is it any wonder that our distinguished President, seeing the trend of the times, looking into the future, seeing the rocks of Scylla and Charybdis, seeing the danger to the old ship of state, took off the dollar the motto "In God we trust." It is time to take it off. It is time to disconnect God Almighty from the dollar when you have to go out and buy it. Who ever thought of it? Let the fathers in their spirit hover over this Government and protect it from the money sharks who would destroy and uproot it. Buying money! I want to meet some Republican Senator before the most elite audience of the East some time and discuss the proposition of the Grand Old Party buying money. Oh, we have come to our last extremity. The trusts are controlling the Government. The trusts are running it.

I do not want any money that I have to buy. I do not like that kind of money. I want money issued as the Constitution of this Union declares it shall be issued—by the Government itself—and circulated among its people. I do not want any trust money. I wonder what the Grand Old Party is going to put on the dollar. They do not trust in God any more. I wonder in whom they do trust. [Laughter.] I wonder where you are going, gentlemen, to get your trust. That is the biggest trust I ever heard of.

Mr. President, there is another combination. I am taking up more time with these brief remarks than I intended in the beginning. There is another combination that is closely allied to the trust evil. It is a voluntary association of persons, not incorporated, and it does not come strictly within the legal definition of a trust, but its operations and its tendencies are just as harmful and just as hurtful, and while it could not be brought strictly under the provisions of this bill, should it become a law, still the trust question can not be discussed without discussing its twin sister—the stock exchanges of New York and the great cotton exchange, if you please.

From Mr. Moody's Manual of Industrial and Miscellaneous Securities I find that the Stock Exchange of New York is a voluntary association and not incorporated. I find, sir, that they have eleven hundred seats there—never more, never less. I find that these seats sell at varying prices. They sold in 1870 as low as $14,000. They sold in 1895 as high as $95,000. They have sold at $84,000, they have sold at $38,000, and they have sold at other amounts.

What is a seat on this board of exchange, Mr. President? It is an opportunity to get on the ground floor for the purpose of controlling the price of the commodities of this country. That comes very nearly being a trust. That very nearly comes under the prohibitions of this bill.

In the Stock Exchange of New York eleven hundred men pay as high as $95,000 for their seats, for what? To pilfer and rob the people of the country of their products.

Sir, I hail from that section of the Southland where cotton is king. God Almighty has given us a corner on the greatest commodity upon the face of the earth—cotton. I, sir, would like to take you to-day in your imagination to the cotton fields of my section. There I could show you little children not larger than that little page, thinly clad, on frosty, cold, freezing mornings picking cotton with their little frosty hands. Sir, those children are just as dear to the hearts of their parents as are your children dear to you and as my children are dear to me.

Do we in the South control the price of this product? Have we the power to control it? I answer no. It is controlled absolutely by the stock gamblers and by the thieves of Wall street.

Mr. President, 75 per cent—yes, 90 per cent—of the business of that exchange is purely speculative or gambling business. Knock out the speculative feature, destroy the gambling privilege, and the cotton exchange dies of its own weight.

Mr. President, at some other day at this session of Congress I hope to introduce a bill having for its object and its purpose the destruction of that great evil, and I hope that it may have at least the respectful consideration of the majority of this body.

Sir, do the parents of the little children in the South control the price of this product? Do they control the price of cotton? I say, sir, to you they have got no more to do with it than an unborn babe, except that they make the crop and carry it to market.

Who control the price? These fellows just over here in Wall street. The stock gamblers do it.

We raised last year in round numbers 13,000,000 bales of cotton. The stock exchange of New York sold from six to ten times as much. Seventy-five million bales is the lowest estimate I have seen. Yet I am told that this manipulation of this board of exchange does not control the price of this commodity. I say it does.

Ah, sir, thank God the laborers of this country are organizing to-day. From Maine to California, from Cape Cod to Kalamazoo, they are getting ready for a fight. This is going to be a great fight. It is an unequal fight. Upon the one hand we have trained men, we have trained financiers, we have money, we have wealth. On the other hand, we have the poor of the earth, with all the best of the earth at last, but untrained and unskilled in this character of warfare.

Ah, Mr. President, this is going to be a fight, and I hope the day will soon come when we can see the stock gamblers of New York in felon's stripes. Why, sir, the penitentiary house would be a summer resort as compared with what they ought to have if they had their just deserts.

Do you tell me that those men do not control the price of our products? The man who asserts that brings down on his own head the ridicule and the contempt of the stock gambler himself, because that is their boast. That is what they claim. What they want to be known as doing is controlling the market. Knock out their gambling, I say, and they drop of their own weight.

Ah, Mr. President, in the southland we are organizing. We are organizing fast. We are organizing quick. We are demanding of the powers that be that the poor people of the earth shall have a just recognition of their rights in the great administration of public affairs. Sir, I would that the laboring people would organize all over this land, no matter whether on the great railroad thoroughfares, in the printing offices, in the shops, in the factories, or on the farms. God speed the day when their organization will prove so strong that Senators on this floor will turn to them eager and anxious to know their desires and wishes.

As I know, the best way on earth to control a politician is just to get the public behind him. I know two or three men down in my State who have absolutely worn the right ear nearly off holding it to the ground listening for the expression of public sentiment. I say when the labor organizations of this great country get to that point where they can command respect, then there will be a change in the sentiment of this august body.

Ah, Mr. President, I am for the under dog in every fight. I do not care what kind of a dog fight it is. You can just pick out your kind of dog, and every time you see a dog fight you may just swear that JEFF DAVIS is for the under dog in that fight. I am for him every time.

Sir, I hope the day will come when these labor organizations may be strong enough to cope with this great evil. We of the South are starting right. We are organizing. We are getting together. We are demanding just recognition, and I believe we are going to get it.

Sir, this panic, in my humble judgment, started by the trust magnates and their coconspirators and confederates, the stock gamblers, had no other object and no other purpose than to wrongfully take from the cotton producers of the South half of their property. They are trying to do it. You can not get money. You have got to buy money, you have got to buy cotton, you have got to buy products, you have got to buy everything from the trusts. I say, sir, it is an unequal fight.

May I get one ray of hope from the Republican side on this question? Is there one Senator on the other side who will dare to face their expressed policy and the public declaration of the Republican party and step across the line and give his hand and say he will help to fight this battle? Ah, sir, this is a just cause. It is a just fight.

I have, sir, a very valuable piece of statistics prepared by an able statistician of this city, Prof. J. H. Shinn, showing the growth and the organization and the business methods of the Standard Oil trust. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read it or comment upon it, but I ask leave, sir, that it be printed as a part of my remarks on this question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The paper referred to is as follows:

THE PRINCIPAL TRUSTS.

1. The Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, otherwise known as "The Standard Oil Company," or the Standard.

From the report of the Commissioner of Corporations of the petroleum industry, issued by the Department of Commerce and Labor on May 20, 1907, the following facts concerning this corporation are put in evidence over the signature of Herbert Knox Smith, the Commissioner of Corporations, and directed to the President of the United States.

This corporation started in 1867 as a partnership under the firm name of Rockefeller, Andrews & Flagler; in 1870 they took the corporate form of the Standard Oil Company of Ohio, with a capital of $1,000,000. At that time they controlled not more than 10 per cent of the refining business of the country. Within ten years from that date the process of combination under these interests had been so rapid that they admittedly controlled from 90 per cent to 95 per cent of this branch of the oil industry, and their control of the pipe-line business had increased with equal rapidity. In 1882 they concentrated their holdings under the Standard Oil trust, which included the entire stock of fourteen companies and a majority interest in twenty-six additional concerns. The capitalization of the trust was $70,000,000 and the appraised valuation of its property over $55,000,000. Nine individuals, acting as trustees of the trust, owned together on that date more than $46,000,000 out of the $70,000,000 of the trust certificates issued. These nine men, with their holdings, were as follows:

| John D. Rockefeller | 191,700 |
| Henry M. Flagler | 60,000 |
| Charles Pratt | 54,000 |
| O. H. Payne | 50,000 |
| William Rockefeller | 32,000 |
| J. A. Bostwick | 34,000 |
| W. G. Warden | 29,400 |
| John D. Archbold | 7,000 |
| Benjamin Brewster | 8,180 |
| Total | 466,280 |

In 1892 the trust was attacked legally and the trustees announced that the trust would be dissolved and a process of so-called "dissolution" took place. Mr. Smith is very careful to tell us, however, that this dissolution in no way affected the original control of the aforesaid individuals over the entire concern, because the stocks of each of the various subsidiary corporations were not returned to their original holders, but were allotted to the holders of trust certificates on a pro rata basis, with the result that the trustees who had previously held the majority of the trust certificates now held the majority interest in each one of the constituent companies.

In 1898 contempt proceedings were started against the Standard Oil Company of Ohio on the ground that it had not withdrawn from the trust. Thereupon, pending the decision, these interests selected the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey as a holding corporation for the constituent Standard companies and increased its common stock to $100,000,000 for that purpose. This company then gave its own stock in exchange for the stocks of such companies. This change, like the previous one of 1892, as was its obvious purpose, left the monopoly power of the Standard capitalists undisturbed. The same group of men who had been holders of a majority of the trust certificates, then of a majority of the stocks in the subsidiary companies, now became holders of a majority of the stock of the controlling New Jersey company.

The outstanding stock of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey is about $98,000,000. It controls at least ten refining companies, four lubricating oil companies, three crude-oil producing companies, thirteen pipe-line and other transportation companies, six marketing companies, sixteen natural gas companies, and fifteen foreign concerns, besides having close affiliation with a considerable number of other concerns.

In 1904 it and its affiliated concerns refined over 84 per cent of the crude oil run through refineries; produced more than 86 per cent of the country's total output of illuminating oil; maintained a similar proportion of the export trade in illuminating oil; transported through pipe lines near nine-tenths of the crude oil of the older fields and 98 per cent of the crude of the mid continent, or Kansas territory, fields; secured over 88 per cent of the sales of illuminating oil to retail dealers throughout the country, and obtained in certain large sections as high as 99 per cent of such sales. It also controlled practically similar proportions of the production and marketing of gasoline and lubricating oil.

The Standard has as its only competitors in the refining business about seventy-five small refineries, whose total consumption of crude oil is less than that of a single one of the Standard's, to wit, the Bayonne refinery, and less than one-fifth of the Standard's total consumption. Over fifteen of these competitors are dependent for their supply of crude oil upon the Standard's pipe lines, and are so restricted by this dependence as to be capable of little effective competition or growth. In the pipe-line business of the eastern and mid-continent fields it has up to the present but one competitor of any significance—the Pure Oil Company—and that competitor's pipe-line business is not more than one-twentieth of that of the Standard.

Mr. Smith goes on to say that the monopoly of this concern has never rested on ownership of the source of supply of crude oil. Not over one-sixth of the total production of crude in the country in 1905 came from wells owned by the Standard interests. The growth and present power of the trust rest primarily on its control of transportation facilities. Other means of domination have been found in local price discrimination and other unfair methods in the sale of products, as well as in the elimination of the jobber; but throughout its entire history the factor of transportation has been the keystone of its success.

The scandalous railway discriminations obtained by the Standard in its earlier years as against its competitors did more than all other causes together to establish it in its controlling position. Later, when the rebate per se was substantially abandoned, the Standard was able, by compelling the cooperation of the railroads, to establish in place thereof a system of secret or open discriminations in rates in its own favor covering almost the entire country and of such a nature that throughout large sections it could sell and make a profit on oil at prices which left no profit for competitors. The existence of many such important railway discriminations was set forth in full in the report of the commissioner on the transportation of petroleum in May, 1906, and as a result of that report all the secret rates, Mr. Smith thinks, have been discontinued and all discriminations in open rates largely abandoned. It now has a pipe-line system of more than 40,000 miles; it opposes the construction of other pipe lines by competing companies, and usually with success. By means of vexatious litigation and preempting of rights of way, by the aid of railroads which refused rights of way across their lines and adjusted their rates so as to injure competing lines, by paying local discriminating premiums for crude oil in the limited areas reached by rival lines the Standard has been able to practically prevent the rise of any efficient competitor in the pipe-line business or has destroyed or absorbed rivals already established.

Having thus established and maintained its monopoly of the pipe-line business, it has in substance refused to act as a common carrier or to transport and deliver oil for independent producers or to independent refineries, and, where making any rates at all for such transportation, has made them at least as high as the railroad rate between the same points, although the cost of pipe-line transportation is very much less.

Mr. Smith also stated that the costs of pipe-line transportation, as reported by the company, were from three to six times greater than they should be, taking into consideration all the costs of operation, maintenance, depreciation, and profit on investment. Summing up, Mr. Smith says:

"In brief, the history and present operation of these Standard interests show throughout the past thirty-five years a substantial monopolization of the petroleum industry of the country, a deliberate destruction of competition, and a consequent control of that industry by less than a dozen men, who have reaped enormous profits therefrom."

During the last year case after case has been brought against the Standard for violation of law. The total number of separate offenses named in these indictments exceeds 8,000. A conviction was secured in Chicago on an indictment of 1,462 counts and a fine imposed of $29,000,000.

It will be seen from the above that while the original companies were incorporated in many States, the holding or trust company, comprehending all of them, was incorporated in New Jersey. This is true of fully 90 per cent of all large holding and trust companies. The original companies represent many State charters, while the holding company springs from New Jersey. You will see, therefore, how difficult it is to estimate the proportion of trust companies incorporated under New Jersey law. While the original companies represent nearly all of the States, New Jersey gets the holding company, which makes New Jersey the boss trust company State of the country, doing not less than 75 per cent of the business and very probably 90 per cent.

THE IRON AND STEEL TRUST.

The United States Steel Company was organized under the laws of the State of New Jersey in February and March, 1901, the trust buying outright all the companies forming the new combination. Moody's Manual for 1907 gives the capital stock of this trust, preferred and common, at $950,000,000, of which the constituent companies hold as follows:

| 1. Federal Steel, common and preferred | $99,000,000 |
| 2. National Tube, common and preferred | 80,000,000 |
| 3. American Steel and Wire, common and preferred | 90,000,000 |
| 4. National Steel, common and preferred | 59,000,000 |
| 5. American Tin Plate, common and preferred | 46,000,000 |
| 6. American Steel and Hoop, common and preferred | 33,000,000 |
| 7. American Sheet Steel, common and preferred | 49,000,000 |
| 8. American Bridge, common and preferred | 61,000,000 |
| 9. Lake Superior, common and preferred | 29,000,000 |
| 10. Shelby Steel Tube, common and preferred | 13,000,000 |
| 11. Carnegie Company, common and preferred | 160,000,000 |

In 1906 this trust declared a 7 per cent dividend on its preferred stock, amounting to $25,219,000, and a 2 per cent dividend on its common stock, amounting to $10,166,000. Moody's Manual gave the net profits available for dividends at the close of each quarter in the year 1906 as follows:

| March 31 | $22,371,000 |
| June 30 | 24,536,000 |
| September 30 | 23,543,000 |
| December 31 | 27,767,000 |

In that year they declared four dividends of $8,846,432 each, and held a surplus undivided amounting to $97,720,714.

In the testimony taken before the Industrial Commission enough was proved to warrant the Commission in a unanimous finding that the capitalization of these combinations is usually a sum considerably above the value of the plants together with the patents they control. The Commission further says that in cases that are considered fairly conservative, the amount of stock issued, including both preferred and common stock, is from two to three times more than this value, while in not a few instances the capital stock seems to bear little relation to actual value of plants and patents. Mr. James B. Dill, a lawyer of New York City, and author of "Dill on New Jersey Corporations," stated that he declined to incorporate one company having $500,000 assets and a capital of $8,000,000. He said that notwithstanding this other attorneys were obtained and that the company was now doing business on a $500,000 asset basis with a capitalization of $8,000,000.

In the further testimony of Mr. Dill it was assumed, and not denied, that 60 per cent of all the charters taken out by the syndicates, combines, and trusts, are taken out in the State of New Jersey. These figures show that the Steel Trust is overcapitalized several hundred million dollars and that its profits on a cash basis run from 20 per cent to 30 per cent on the capital actually invested.

THE SUGAR TRUST.

The Sugar Refineries Company, or the sugar trust, was organized August 6 and ready for work in November, 1887. It controlled practically all the sugar refining interests except two. Its authorized capital was $50,000,000. This trust was formed on the trustee basis, and upon suit being brought against it was reorganized as a single corporation in 1891, under the laws of New Jersey, with the same capital stock under the name, The American Sugar Refining Company. In 1893 it bought out four Philadelphia concerns, which together produced about one-third of the total product of the United States, and a controlling interest in the Baltimore Sugar Refinery Company, and increased its capital $25,000,000. In 1896 Arbuckle Brothers, dealers in coffee, resolved to put up a sugar refinery in competition with the sugar trust. To throttle this the sugar trust bought a controlling interest in the Woolson Spice Company, of Toledo, Ohio, and entered upon the coffee business. The sugar trust was not able, however, to throttle the Arbuckle interest. Besides the Arbuckles, the competitors of the sugar trust are Claus Doscher, the Mollenhauer Sugar Refining Company, and the National Sugar Refining Company. The dividends run from 7 per cent to 12 per cent per annum. Mr. Havemeyer in his testimony said:

"I repeat that all this agitation against trusts is against merely the business machinery employed to take from the public what the Government in its tariff laws says it is proper and suitable they should have. It is the Government, through its tariff laws, which plunders the people, and the trusts, etc., are merely the machinery for doing it."

He said again:

"The true communism of pelf is the customs tariff bill. It says to the people, 'Here is the law we have enacted for your robbery. Do not complain of it, but do your utmost to attack and injure the machinery engaged in extracting from you what we legislate shall be taken from you.'"

He said again:

"Beyond a tariff for revenue and a tariff for equalizing against foreign bounties there is no excuse for giving to one industry a protection of 100 per cent, as against 4 per cent to another. The result is that the Government fleeces the community in the interest of some favored industry."

The sugar trust produces about 90 per cent of the total output of the country, and if run at full power could produce enough for the entire country and an excess of 20 per cent more.

THE WHISKY COMBINATION.

In 1890 this trust was organized under the name of the Distilling and Cattle Feeding Company, with a capital stock of $35,000,000. It started in with a control over eighty-one distilleries and in 1892 it bought four other distilleries, thus giving it practically the entire control of the whisky interest of the country. In 1896 an Illinois court decided this combination to be a trust, and in 1898 the Standard Distilling and Distributing Company was incorporated under the laws of New Jersey with a capital of $24,000,000. Three other corporations were in existence at that time—the American Spirits Manufacturing Association, incorporated in New York; the Kentucky Spirits Distributing Company, and the Kentucky Distilleries and Warehouse Company, both incorporated in New Jersey. In 1899 these four companies were incorporated in New Jersey, together with certain rye distilling properties, under the name of the Distilling Company of America, with $125,000,000 capital.

OTHER IMPORTANT TRUSTS.

The following trusts are given in brief:

The American Locomotive Company, incorporated in New York with a capital of $50,000,000, a combination of ten companies.

The American Lumber Company, incorporated in New Jersey, with a capital of $8,000,000, and the control of the principal cities in the Union.

The American Pipe Manufacturing Company, incorporated in New Jersey, with $5,000,000 capital, and owning twenty-eight subsidiary companies.

The American Smelting and Refining Company, incorporated in New Jersey, with a capital of $50,000,000, controls 85 per cent of the lead and silver output of the country.

The American Tobacco Company, incorporated in New Jersey, with a capital of $180,000,000, controls practically the entire manufactured tobacco business of the country.

The Republic Iron and Steel Company, incorporated in New Jersey, with a capital of $25,000,000, controls a large number of companies in Pennsylvania, Alabama, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, and Minnesota.

The United States Rubber Company, incorporated in New Jersey, with a capital of $40,000,000, has practical control of the whole country.

The American Cement Company, incorporated in New Jersey, with a capital of $2,100,000, controls the six largest companies of the Union.

The American Chicle Company, incorporated in New Jersey, with a capital of $6,000,000, controls the six great chewing-gum factories of the country.

The American Cotton Oil Company, incorporated in New Jersey, with a capital of $20,237,000, controls sixteen of the largest cotton-seed oil concerns of the United States.

The American Hide and Leather Company, incorporated in New Jersey, with a capital of $35,000,000, controls thirty-five of the great companies in the United States.

The American Ice Securities Company, incorporated in New Jersey, with a capital of $20,000,000, controls the output of three large ice combines, the American Ice Company, the Knickerbocker Ice Company, and the Consolidated Ice Company.

The American Linseed Company, incorporated in New Jersey, with a capital of $16,750,000, controlling 85 per cent of the linseed-oil business of the country.

The Allis-Chalmers Company, incorporated under the laws of New Jersey, with a capital of $25,000,000, controlling five great companies in four different States.

The American Can Company, incorporated under the laws of New Jersey, with a capital of $88,000,000, controlling absolutely thirty-two companies and leasing twelve more.

The American Car Foundry Company, incorporated under the laws of New Jersey, with a capital of $60,000,000, being a consolidation of the eight principal car companies of the country.

But why enumerate further? Enough has been indicated to show that the United States is, of all countries of the globe, the most trust ridden. We have trusts on ice, on flour, on steel, meat, on cotton oil, and on almost every conceivable article of manufactured goods.

"Trusts to the right of us
Bellow and thunder."

In fact, the United States Government seems to be an organization of the trusts, for the trusts, and by the trusts. Moody's Manual for 1907 reports 1,466 industrial corporations with a combined capital of $9,849,833,000.

One thousand and fifty-one of them have less than $5,000,000 capital each, or a combined capital of $1,606,658,000. The other 451 have a combined capital of $8,243,175,000.

Hon. CHARLES LITTLEFIELD, in a speech delivered in the House of Representatives in 1903, enumerated and had printed in the RECORD a list of trusts in which he enumerated something more than 480 with a combined capital of $9,231,136,698. He also enumerated about the same number of local and natural monopoly trusts having a combined capital of $4,519,579,819, making a grand total of trust capital of $13,750,000,000, or an ownership of fully one-eighth of the entire property of the country.

GENERAL REFLECTIONS.

The burden of the testimony before the Industrial Commission given by trust witnesses was that the principal object in the formation of every trust was an increase of profits.

Commissioner Smith in his report to the President estimated the net earnings of the Standard Oil Trust from 1882 to 1906 at $790,000,000, and added the significant words "possibly much more." He charged that such profits could not have been secured honestly, and denied that the trust had reduced prices, but that on the contrary it had forced them up. In the testimony taken by the Government to dissolve the Standard Oil Trust, begun in New York last September, it was shown that the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, a feeble little corporation with but a capital of $1,000,000, cleared as profits in the year 1906 $10,516,082, or more than 1,000 per cent. It paid dividends of $4,495,500, or more than 450 per cent.

In seven years the parent company, the Standard Oil of New Jersey, with a capital of less than $100,000,000, cleared $490,315,934, or $70,000,000 a year, and paid in dividends $308,359,403, or more than $48,000,000 per annum. In the twenty-six years since the formation of the trust, the profits were proven to have been over $900,000,000, or nearly $40,000,000 per annum.

From the richest fifty-one men of the United States, it appears that six men of this group, the oil group, own together $960,000,000, divided as follows:

|---|---|
| John D. Rockefeller | $600,000,000 |
| William Rockefeller | 100,000,000 |
| H. H. Rogers | 100,000,000 |
| Flagler | 60,000,000 |
| Archbold | 50,000,000 |
| Payne | 50,000,000 |

This oil group of multimillionaires owns aproximately $1,000,000,000 of the country's wealth. Six men of this thieving and murderous trust coterie own approximately one-hundredth of all the wealth, real and personal, of the United States.

Mr. DAVIS. Sir, I wish to refer to the Standard Oil for just a moment, and will leave the stock question for that purpose. The Standard Oil of course is the old he-trust of the country. It is the one that has all the paraphernalia and the earmarks of a trust. I dislike Standard Oil. I hate the smell of coal oil. Petroleum makes me sick.

Sir, I ask to-day that something be done to curtail the great power of this monster trust, Mr. John D. Rockefeller's trust, the great Standard Oil Trust.

Repeating, I say that this panic had for its object and its purpose the taking of our crops away from us. What have we got down in the South? I appeal to every Southern Senator, aye, I appeal to every Southern man to stand ready for this fight. The poor laboring men of the South to-day are organizing. They are trying to stem the tide. They are trying to resist the force. They are trying to command a decent price for their products. They ask by petition, they ask by memorial, they ask through their Representatives that the Congress of the United States, their sworn servants, shall come to their assistance.

God bless the people of the South, my home land. God bless the people of Arkansas. Mr. President, I never expect to hold an office that shall not be given to me by the people of my native State. I never expect to hold an office that shall not be given to me by their generous hands.

When I speak the name of Arkansas, sir, I am swept with a flood of memories. It carries me back to my home with my wife and my babes. It carries me back to the fields and the farms and the shops. It carries me back to a people as brave, as loyal, as true, and withal as intelligent as any people who live upon God's green earth.

They to-day ask for a respectful consideration of the bill that I introduce. I may present it awkwardly, I may present it without the necessary dignified address of Senatorial decorum, but, sir, the meat is there, the thing is there, and I want to know if the Republicans of this nation can afford to ge before the country in the great contest that is now on and say by their action on this great subject, "We do not intend to harm the trusts; we do not intend to disturb them; we do not want to disturb business." Can you afford to do it, gentlemen? Are you going to do it?

Is this bill going to be put to sleep? Shall that be its fate? Oh, if you do, I say to you to-day that as long as I have the honor to occupy this seat, as a peer of any Senator on this floor, this bill shall rise from its ashes; this bill shall rise to fret you, and you had just as well dispose of it now. You had just as well defeat it now, because you have got to beat it at last. You have got to beat it finally. If you want to go to the country with your publicly expressed declaration that you are in favor of killing trusts, and if you want to leave that pledge unredeemed, then I challenge any Senator from Maine to California, no matter where he is from, if he will get an audience of his own people intelligent enough to consider the merits of this bill, and there, sir, I will meet him, and we will fight this question out before his own constituents.

This is the bill which I present, sir, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Attorney-General or the district attorney, on both, with the assistants, shall institute and conduct all suits for the enforcement of this act in the district courts of the State in which said offense may be committed, and upon appeal the Attorney-General of the United States or his assistants shall prosecute said suits in the Supreme Court of the United States or any courts of appeal. And all actions authorized and brought under this act shall have precedence, on motion either of the Attorney-General or the district attorney, of all business, civil or criminal, except in criminal cases where the defendants are in jail.

SEC. 10. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed, and this act shall be in force and take effect from and after the date of passage.

B.

CAUSES LEADING TO THE ORGANIZATION OF TRUSTS.

The Industrial Commission of 1900 and 1901 in summing up the causes leading to the organization of trusts say that most of the witnesses were of opinion that competition, so vigorous as to destroy nearly all the profits, was the chief cause. Mr. Havemeyer agreed with this, but said that this competition had been brought about by the fact that the too high protective tariff had tempted many rivals into the field, and named the customs tariff as the chief cause. Some of the witnesses stated that their organizations were formed to make economies, to lessen competition, and to get higher profits. Chairman Gates said that the American Steel and Wire Company was formed because its organizers "wished to be the wire manufacturers of the world."

FORM OF THE ORGANIZATION.

The form of organization that has given them their name, "trusts," was the one started by the Standard Oil Trust in 1882, afterwards followed by the Whisky Combination, the Distillers and Cattle Feeders' Trust, and the Sugar Trust. The stockholders simply assigned their stock in trust to a board of trustees without the power of revocation. That board of trustees then held the voting power of the stocks of the different companies and was thus enabled, through the lection of directors, to control them absolutely. These trusts, owing to hostile legislation, apparently went out of existence, although this is a matter of much doubt.

The form of organization that seems most common at the present time is a single large corporation which owns outright the different plants. A combination of this kind is formed by a purchase of all the plants of the different corporations, the corporations then dissolving as separate corporations. Payments for the plants are largely made in stock of the new corporation, and the affairs are managed by the stockholders of the one corporation through their board of directors. Most of these companies organize under New Jersey law.

Another form of organization, which is in many particulars quite like the original trust form of the old Standard Oil Trust, is that which has been taken by the Federal Steel Company, the Distilling Company of America, and others. In this form the central company, instead of purchasing the plants of the different corporations which it is proposed to unite, simply buys a majority of the stock or possibly the entire stock of each one of the corporations. The separate corporations keep in separate corporate existence, but a majority of the stock being held by the one larger corporation, its officers of course elect the boards of directors of all the separate corporations, and in this way hold complete control.

The total capitalization of the new industrial combinations reach an enormous sum, well into the billions, and far exceeds the cash value of their property.

At the conclusion of his remarks, Mr. DAVIS said:

I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 12, 1907.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read, in which occurred the following entry:

Mr. ALDRICH entered a motion to reconsider the action of the Senate in referring sundry letters of the Secretary of the Interior submitting drafts of bills to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. KEAN. The motion of the Senator from Rhode Island, as I understood it, included also a letter from the Assistant Secretary of War transmitting a draft of a bill. I ask that the Journal be amended in that respect.

Mr. CLAPP. I could not hear the Senator.

Mr. KEAN. As I understood the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], it was to reconsider the action of the Senate in reference to sundry drafts of bills sent in by the Secretary of the Interior, and I also understood him to include the draft of a bill and a communication sent in by the Assistant Secretary of War, so that the motion included all that was done in that way. I ask that the Journal be corrected in that respect.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the amendment of the Journal proposed by the Senator from New Jersey? The Chair hears none. Without objection the Journal will stand approved as amended.

SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I submit a concurrent resolution, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a concurrent resolution, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the board of education of the District of Columbia are hereby directed to suspend all pending proceedings as to the superintendent of public schools until the inquiry heretofore ordered by the Senate shall have been concluded and reported upon to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. TELLER. I should like to know what the inquiry is. I think it is somewhat doubtful whether we should interfere with the board of education under the present conditions. Has there been a call for sundry information or something like that? I do not know what the purpose is. I wish the Senator from Nebraska would state why this resolution should be passed.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Senator that a few days ago, as he may remember, the Senate directed the Committee on the District of Columbia to investigate the school trouble here. The matter is proceeding over there, and there is not any doubt, I have been informed, I will say indirectly by the board, that some precipitant action is going to be taken.

The Senator perhaps knows, through the press, that the superintendent of schools is being tried by the board. Members of the board informed me that they had made up their mind quite before they began the trial. The superintendent at present is sick in bed, and he is very seriously ill, I am informed. He has not been able to attend the hearings. The hearings are proceeding, and from the best information that has come out as to the result final action by the board is liable to be reached at any moment. If we are to have a hearing at any time when it will be of consequence, we should ask the board to desist from further procedure until the Senate committee has had a chance to have the parties interested appear before it.

Mr. TELLER. I do not remember the resolution to which the Senator refers. I ask the Senator if we have taken the matter out of the hands of the board of education and put it in the hands of the Committee on the District of Columbia. If that is the case, I have nothing further to say about it.

Mr. BURKETT. The Senate, by a resolution, directed the Committee on the District of Columbia to investigate this matter.

Mr. CULBERSON. While the Senator is waiting for a copy of the resolution passed some days ago, may I ask him to yield to have the pending resolution read again?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska.

The Secretary again read the concurrent resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Has the order of resolutions been reached?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not been reached.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest that the resolution should come up in its proper order, after the routine morning business, which precedes concurrent or other resolutions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the further consideration of the concurrent resolution at this time.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the conclusions of fact and of law filed under the act of January 20, 1885, in the French spoliation claims set out in the annexed findings by the court relating to the vessel schooner Benja, Samuel O. FINANCIAL STATISTICS.

Mr. ALDRICH. From the Committee on Finance, I report a resolution and ask for its present consideration. I will say that it is the unanimous report of that committee.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate the following information:

First, a statement giving names and location, classified by States, of all United States depositaries and the amount of public money on deposit daily in each from October 1, 1907, to December 3, 1907, with amount and character of securities therefor, and an explanation of important changes made in either amount or location of said deposits.

Second, a statement showing in detail the condition of the national banks on August 22, 1907, and December 3, 1907, and the amount of national bank notes outstanding from time to time during such period.

Third, an abstract of the proposals received by the Secretary of the Treasury for the purchase of the Panama bonds and 3 per cent certificates of indebtedness, authorized by the Treasury circular of November 18, 1907; the amount of such bonds and certificates issued, to whom awarded, and the reasons for the issue.

Fourth, a detailed statement of any information he may have as to the amount of clearing-house certificates issued by the clearing-house association of the principal cities from November 25, 1907, to December 3, 1907; the character of certificates, and the purposes for which they were used.

Fifth, any information in his possession as to the movement of currency between the different sections of the country during the period from October 1, 1907, and December 3, 1907, compared with previous years, and especially of shipments by the Treasury, or otherwise, from New York and Washington to points south and west.

Sixth, a statement showing the amount of gold imports and exports from October 1, 1907, to December 3, 1907.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, just a matter of inquiry for the present. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the resolution why the date in the fourth paragraph is placed November 25, rather than earlier?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think November 25 was the date on which the first clearing-house certificates were issued.

Mr. KEAN. It was earlier. It was in October.

Mr. ALDRICH. My information is that it was earlier. I think that date should be October 25.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that the resolution be amended in that particular.

Mr. ALDRICH. That was my mistake. I had the date November 25 in my mind in regard to another matter.

Mr. CULBERSON. My impression is that clearing-house certificates were issued before November 25.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; the date should be October 25.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed modification will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Fourth, a detailed statement of any information he may have as to the amount of clearing-house certificates issued by the clearing-house associations of the principal cities from October 25, 1907, to December 3, 1907, the character of such certificates, and the purposes for which they are used.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the modification is agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, in listening to the resolution I do not remember to have heard an inquiry as to the character of securities that have been deposited by the depositors.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is in the resolution expressly stated.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let that part be read.

Mr. KEAN. It is in the first part.

Mr. CULBERSON. I know it is understood to be there, but I should like to hear it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read that portion of the resolution.

The Secretary read as follows:

SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BURKETT. I ask for the consideration of the concurrent resolution which I sent to the desk before the routine morning business was received.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the board of education of the District of Columbia are hereby directed to suspend all pending proceedings as to the superintendent of public schools until the inquiry heretofore ordered by the Senate shall have been concluded and reported upon to the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not understand the purport of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the concurrent resolution at the request of the Senator from Nevada.

The Secretary again read the concurrent resolution.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether this resolution has been referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURKETT. I just offered it this morning, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understand the resolution has not as yet gone to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I think it is of sufficient importance to warrant its consideration by that committee before the Senate acts upon it.

Mr. BURKETT. As I explained before the Senator came in, the Senate the other day passed a resolution directing the Committee on the District of Columbia to make this investigation. The matter is going on down there, and I am informed that the opinion is that the superintendent will be discharged, rightly or wrongly. The Senator has no doubt read the proceedings that took place yesterday and the testimony of at least two principals of high schools. I ask him especially if he has read the evidence of Miss Westcott, the principal of the Western High School. Probably before the Senate will convene next week, as we have now agreed to adjourn until Monday, final action will have been taken by the board.

I will say to the Senator that this morning certain members of the Committee on the District of Columbia, such members as could get together to confer about this matter, some four of us, were of the unanimous opinion that such a resolution should be passed to stay proceedings until the Senate committee could do what it has been directed by the Senate to do.

I will further tell the Senator how, from all appearances down there, the board started out. In fact, two of the members of the board told me that it was not necessary to have any hearing. They started out to discharge the superintendent. They have pretended to give a hearing, and as the hearing has progressed from day to day it has been apparent that the statement of those two members of the board was true.

What occurred yesterday displays the hostility to the superintendent and the refusal of the board to give him anything near a fair hearing. The superintendent is at present sick at home in his bed, and his doctor says he is very seriously ill. Yet notwithstanding that fact, the board is going on with the hearing and may possibly, and I think it altogether probable that it will, dispose of this matter by discharging the superintendent in that condition.

The Senate last week, on some other Senator's motion than my own, directed the Committee on the District of Columbia to investigate this matter and to provide a forum where the superintendent's side could be presented.

I will say to the Senator that there seem to have been in the start four charges against the superintendent. Two of them, I understand, have been dropped. One of these was that he collected 54,000 books of the District of Columbia and withdrew them from use in the schools. It was shown in evidence that that was done on the board's order. The other charge was, so far as we can learn, that he ordered Latin to be taught in the seventh grade, which the board did not approve of. I understand that both those charges have been withdrawn.

Of the other two charges, as I understand from the best information I can get, one of them is that he did not attend a certain board meeting last summer that perhaps he should have attended. I will not say "perhaps," but probably he should have attended it. He failed to attend it. The other charge is with reference to some article that appeared in an educational journal. It has seemed from the evidence that permission has not been granted yet to witnesses to explain any of those occurrences. As I said, it appears it would not make any difference—in fact, two members of the board have told me it would not make any difference—what happened, that they were going to discharge the superintendent anyway.

The Committee on the District of Columbia in considering this matter have simply taken this position: The law provides that educational matters shall be left in the hands of the superintendent of instruction. I dare say that is the rule in every city that any Senator comes from or any other city, and that whether Latin or other studies shall be taught is for the superintendent to determine. If the committee is to have any hearing in accordance with the direction of the Senate, the proceedings over there must be stayed. That is the reason for the introduction of this resolution.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Who employs the superintendent? Is he appointed and employed by the board of education?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes; under the law the board of education employs the superintendent.

Mr. NELSON. He is not employed by Congress?

Mr. BURKETT. Not by Congress.

Mr. NELSON. Nor by the Commissioners?

Mr. BURKETT. Nor by the Commissioners.

Mr. NELSON. Is not this resolution, in effect, a sort of legislative injunction against the board of education of the District of Columbia? What right have we to enjoin that board from investigating the qualifications and fitness of one of their own appointees?

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Senator, in reply, that this resolution is only to enable the Committee on the District of Columbia to carry out the resolution the Senate adopted the other day. When the Senate passed that resolution they undertook to take this matter out of the hands of the board of education. I ask that the resolution be read, which the Senate passed the other day, directing the Committee on the District of Columbia to take up this matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. SCOTT, and adopted by the Senate on the 5th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia is hereby authorized and directed to inquire into the present status of the management and organization of the public schools of the District of Columbia and to report their conclusions to the Senate.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I know very little about the merits of this controversy. I have simply observed in the papers that there is a proceeding pending against the superintendent of public schools. He is on trial before the board of education upon charges that have been preferred. I think, however, it is a very serious matter for the Congress of the United States to interfere with the action of a board of that kind. It is a board authorized by law, doubtless a board of reputable citizens, and they are proceeding in the due course of administration to exercise the powers that belong to them.

It may be that the board is guilty of serious misconduct. It may be that members of it are guilty of prejudging the case; it may be that they have determined to go through simply the form of a trial and oust this superintendent; but it does seem to me that to warrant so serious an interference with the powers of a great body like the board of education of this city there should be some inquiry and report by the committee that has charge of the affairs of the District of Columbia. I believe Friday is the day of the meeting of that committee and this is Thursday. It appears to me that that commitee could easily meet to-morrow and make a report upon this resolution to the Senate. I understand that I have the power of objection, and I shall object to the consideration of the resolution unless the due and regular course I have suggested is pursued.

Mr. BURKETT. Do I understand that the Senator from Nevada has objected?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. BURKETT. Then I ask that the concurrent resolution be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Nebraska, the concurrent resolution which he has submitted will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. NEWLANDS subsequently said: I wish to withdraw my objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. It would have to be recalled from that committee.

Mr. BURKETT. Then I ask unanimous consent that the concurrent resolution be recalled from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I think the concurrent resolution ought to be considered by the Senate. It is a right serious matter to attempt to interfere with the board of education that has jurisdiction of this matter. Certainly we ought not to act on it to-day. I could not give my consent that it should be acted on to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

DRAFTS OF BILLS FROM EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, referring to the motion made yesterday by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]——

Mr. ALDRICH. Do I understand the Senator's object in calling up this motion is that he desires to make some remarks on it?

Mr. CARTER. The motion has been called up by me for that purpose.

Mr. ALDRICH. I of course have no objection to the Senator doing so. I merely desired to know if he had called up the motion. I had entered the motion, and I am quite willing that the Senator shall now address himself to it.

Mr. CARTER. The motion has been entered, as I understand, by the Senator from Rhode Island to reconsider the reference to the Committee on Indian Affairs of certain drafts of bills transmitted by the Secretary of the Interior, and it is to that that I desire to address myself. I suppose the Senator has no objection to that.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not at all.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, with reference to the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island, I think it important to challenge the attention of the Senate to the subject-matter very briefly in order that an important question of procedure may be settled.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] yesterday made a suggestion as to the propriety of the Chair referring to the Committee on Indian Affairs a communication from the Secretary of the Interior which embodied a bill, or draft of a proposed bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Montana is in error in characterizing my objection as being to the action of the Chair. My objection was to the action of the officer sending such communications to the Senate, and not to the action of the Chair.

Mr. CARTER. I understood the reference or the entertainment of the communication from the Secretary of the Interior was the objectionable feature, but I will accept, of course, the correction made by the Senator from Idaho.

Thereupon it was suggested that the head of a Department had no right to communicate with the Senate. It occurred to me in that connection at the time that the practice was ancient. I had in mind at the moment a general current of such communications from the Departments for many, many years. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] said that such communications never had been received within his knowledge in this Chamber.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I made the statement that I was not aware at the time that there had been a general practice of this kind. I am reconciled to my ignorance in view of the fact that I had spoken to the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who are the oldest Senators in service, including myself, in this body, and no one of those Senators ever knew of such an instance occurring in the legislative history of the Senate. So I think my ignorance was perhaps excusable.

I should like to supplement what I have said by adding that if there has been any such practice it ought to be stopped now. I do not care how ancient it is or how many precedents the Senator can find for it, it should be stopped immediately, in my judgment, and I trust that will be the judgment of the Senate also.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, as to the policy of continuing the practice, I have nothing at this time to say. As to the existence and long standing of the practice, I insist. I think the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], as Secretary of the Interior communicated with the Senate of the United States precisely as the Secretary of the Interior yesterday communicated with the Senate.

I have caused to be collected hastily a list of the cases, and these are but selected here and there at random.

In a communication to the Senate in 1900 Mr. Hitchcock sent the draft of a bill to ratify a Crow Indian treaty or agreement. In the Fifty-fifth Congress, in 1898, Mr. Secretary Bliss forwarded the draft of a bill for the relief of Mission Indians; in the Fifty-fourth Congress Secretary Hoke Smith send forward a bill to ratify a treaty with the Fort Belknap Indians; in the Fifty-third Congress the same Secretary forwarded the draft of a bill for the survey of land of the Five Civilized Tribes. That was done in the second session of the Fifty-third Congress. Secretary Noble, in the Fifty-second Congress, first session, sent an agreement with the Colville Indians recommending its ratification; in the Fifty-second Congress Acting Secretary Chandler sent the draft of a bill for the allotment of land on the White Earth Indian Reservation; in the Fifty-first Congress Secretary Noble sent the draft of a bill for the establishment of a proposed Indian school; in the Fiftieth Congress Secretary Vilas sent to the Senate recommendations for certain appropriations for field matrons in the Indian service; in the Fiftieth Congress the same Secretary transmitted to the Senate a request for an appropriation for the Cherokee freedmen; in the Forty-ninth Congress Secretary Lamar forwarded the draft of a bill to allot lands to the Shawnee Indians; in the same Congress that Secretary presented the Senate with the draft of a bill to improve lands in certain reservations; in the Forty-eighth Congress Acting Secretary Joslyn forwarded the draft of a bill to settle claims against the Omaha and Winnebago Indians, and so forth throughout a long list which I shall incorporate in the RECORD and will not take the time of the Senate to read.

Mr. ALDRICH. But those were all communications forwarded by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CARTER. I find that both the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War have communicated with the Senate in precisely the manner in which this communication was received from the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ALDRICH. Who was then Secretary of War?

Mr. CARTER. It was Mr. Secretary Root. I have his communication here, which I will ask to incorporate in the RECORD if it is thought necessary to do so.

The Secretary of State, under date of December 18, 1901, transmitted to the President of the Senate, and the subject-matter was laid before the Senate by reference to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed, a communication with reference to the rights sought by certain Canadian people to build a dam across an international stream. On the 7th of January, 1901, Secretary Root communicated with Congress again through a communication addressed to the President of the Senate——

Mr. ALDRICH. But did he send in the draft of a bill?

Mr. CARTER. The draft of a bill was unhappily omitted in that case. [Laughter.] But I can not conceive how the placing of a recommendation in definite form by drafting a bill changes the principle involved in the case.

I will, with the permission of the Senate and for the purpose of avoiding an undue consumption of time, incorporate in the RECORD such of these cases as I have been able to find in the brief time at command.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection permission will be granted.

The precedents referred to are as follows:

January 5, 1876, the Secretary of War addressed a communication direct to the Senate calling attention to a former communication by him and suggested: "As no action appears to have been taken with reference to the matter, etc.," and thereupon renews recommendation in his former letter that action be taken by Congress.

Ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

January 6, 1876, the Secretary of War sent a communication with reference to Alaska and invited special attention to the recommendation of General Howard that Alaska be attached as a county to Washington Territory or in some other way be treated as treaty with Russia contemplated. Referred to the Committee on Territories and ordered to be printed.

February 2, 1876, the Secretary of War transmitted a petition asking that the date of a commission in the United States Army be corrected, and recommended that Congress take favorable action thereon. Referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

February 3, 1876, another communication, similar in form, received from the Secretary of War. Referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

February 12, 1876, the Secretary of War addressed a communication to the Senate. Ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

February 17, 1876, a communication from the Secretary of War to the United States Senate and House of Representatives, recommending certain legislation with reference to a system of tolls to be established on a military bridge across the North Platte River at or near Fort Laramie. Referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, in order to dispose of this abuse, if abuse it be, we must not only depart from this long and unbroken line of precedents, but we must likewise change the rules of the Senate. On yesterday I suggested, in agreement with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], that two members of the Executive Department of the Government were recognized by the Constitution and the law as proper to communicate with the Congress at any time—the President, under a Constitutional provision, and the Secretary of the Treasury, under the mandate of the law requiring him to submit estimates to the Congress. Under the rule of the Senate all other heads of Departments are permitted to communicate with Congress. I call the Senator's attention to Rule VII, with which he is perfectly familiar. Under that rule we find that communications from heads of Departments are regularly received and not intruded here without authority. I will read the rule as far as applicable. It is as follows:

1. After the Journal is read, the Presiding Officer shall lay before the Senate messages from the President, reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and other communications addressed to the Senate, etc.

Mr. ALDRICH rose.

Mr. CARTER. I anticipate the Senator's suggestion, which is that that refers to communications in answer to inquiries propounded by the Senate in a regular way. I inquire of the Senator, then, why use two terms to convey one idea? Why say "reports" and "communications?" Reports are presented in response to inquiries propounded by the Senate. Why say "communications?" Because it was intended by the rule of the Senate, as deduced from the language of the rule, that heads of the great Departments of the Government should be at liberty to communicate with the Congress in an orderly fashion in reference to matters coming within their jurisdiction.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will permit me, the law provides that the heads of Departments shall make certain reports. Those reports are made in consequence of law. The rule of the Senate provides that, in addition to those reports which are required by law, the head of a Department may properly send in information requested by the Senate, which shall be laid before the Senate in the same manner as other reports.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator realizes that the reports required from the heads of Departments are directed to the President of the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. The law requires that the heads of Departments shall make annual reports to Congress, but they are transmitted here by the President of the United States under regulations which are made in consequence of law.

Mr. CARTER. But, Mr. President, no annual report or regular report made to any head of a Department is addressed to Congress.

Mr. ALDRICH. The law requires that they shall be made to Congress, but they are transmitted by the President of the United States, as all communications from the heads of Departments should be, except such as are made in answer to a resolution of the Senate or a direction of the Senate.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, as I understand, the law contemplates reports from the Executive Departments to Congress through the President. The Senate is within its proper sphere a law unto itself. The rule of the Senate contemplates reports, not, I imagine, such as are required by law, because those are made to the Congress through the President, but we find in the rule the word "communications," because reports in response to inquiries from Congress regarding legislation here pending are not communications as contradistinguished from reports. Such are reports upon subject-matter submitted to a Department by Congress, but this rule provides that a Department may, and heads of Departments have, without challenge heretofore, throughout a long series of years communicated freely with both the Senate and the House of Representatives in reference to matters coming within their departmental jurisdiction. Now, as to the policy or the wisdom of the policy of continuing this rule and the practice under it we may deal later. As to the existence of the practice, I insist that the record is an ample demonstration of the propriety of such communications and of their reference to an appropriate committee of the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CARTER. I am nearly through.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will just take a second. The rule which the Senator cites does not say that there is any report or communication to be made to the Senate. It recognizes that there are certain reports and certain communications which the heads of Departments may submit to the Senate, which are received under the rule.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit me, I desire to read from the law. Section 193 of the Revised Statutes is in these words, according with the statement made by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

SEC. 193. The head of each Department shall make an annual report to Congress, giving a detailed statement of the manner in which the contingent fund for his Department and for the bureaus and offices therein has been expended, giving the names of every person to whom any portion thereof has been paid; and if for anything furnished, the quantity and price.

I will not read the whole section. That is sufficient to substantiate the proposition of the Senator from Rhode Island, that there are reports which the heads of Departments—not the particular head of the Department to which the Senator referred, the Treasury Department, but all the Departments—particular reports which the heads of the Departments are required in terms to submit to Congress.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia well knows that when this rule was adopted it was known to the Senate that the reports to which the Senator refers were transmitted not by the Secretary or the head of the Department, but only transmitted here by the President of the United States. That had been the proceeding from the beginning of the Government. Now conditions are unchanged as to the manner of transmitting reports known as "annual reports."

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator give the date of the adoption of the rule to which he refers?

Mr. CARTER. I think the practice of addressing the annual reports to the President of the United States is as old as the Government.

Mr. BACON. But this law was passed in 1842.

Mr. CARTER. I think the reports were prior to 1842 and subsequent to 1842 made by the heads of Departments and transmitted to the Congress through the President. I doubt if the Senator from Georgia can recall a case where an annual report has been otherwise transmitted here. But be that as it may, it is only one report.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me. The language of the law which I have read does not limit itself to annual general reports. There are specific reports to be made that are required to be made to Congress. It does not say "annual reports," although they are to be made annually. I will read the section of the law again for the information of Senators:

SEC. 193. The head of each Department shall make an annual report to Congress, giving a detailed statement of the manner in which the contingent fund for his Department and for the bureaus and offices therein has been expended, giving the names of every person to whom any portion thereof has been paid, and if for anything furnished, the quantity and price.

And so on. Then section 194, which follows, imposes an additional duty to make reports to Congress. It says:

SEC. 194. The head of each Department shall make an annual report to Congress of the names of the clerks and other persons that have been employed in his Department and the offices thereof, stating the time that each clerk or other person was actually employed and the sums paid to each; also whether they have been usefully employed, whether the services of any of them can be dispensed with without detriment to the public service, and whether the removal of any individuals and the appointment of others in their stead is required for the better dispatch of business.

The point, as I understand it, is that whatever may be the practice as to "annual reports," the specific provisions of the law refer to particular reports which shall be made annually to Congress. My only purpose in reading these provisions of the law was to illustrate the proposition made by the Senator from Rhode Island—that there are reports which are specifically required to be made to Congress, and that therefore when the language of the rule expresses, as read by the Senator from Montana, that certain reports from the heads of Departments shall be in order at a certain time in our procedure, it refers to the particular reports which the law requires shall be made to Congress, and does not refer to an unlimited power of the heads of Departments at any time they see proper to communicate directly to Congress instead of communicating through the proper medium, the President.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Georgia to favor the Senate with a construction of the word "communications" as it appears in the rule. He has to his own satisfaction disposed of "reports." Why does the rule embrace the words "and communications?"

Mr. BACON. They might refer to communications from the Secretary of the Treasury, who is required to communicate directly to Congress.

Mr. CARTER. But there are the words "heads of Departments."

Mr. BACON. That is a mere sticking in the bark. The words "communications and reports" are to a large degree synonymous and may be used by the Senate in framing its rules without any desire to confer a distinctive authority other than that which is already conferred by law.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the rule may be regarded as fairly construed by the unbroken practice of the Senate. It may be that at some time prior to this the question was raised——

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. It has been suggested to me by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. FRAZIER] that a complete answer to the inquiry of the Senator as to the meaning or the intention of the word "communications" is found in the reply that it necessarily refers to such communications as are made in response to the direction of the Congress. We every day pass resolutions of direction in either House of Congress directing certain Departments to give us certain information, and of course that information comes to us in the way of a communication.

Mr. CARTER. In order to thus limit the definition of the word "communications" it would be necessary to add "communications in response to requests presented by the Congress," otherwise the word must be accorded its ordinary signification.

Mr. President, as opposed to the Senator's construction, which, I think, is somewhat strained, I cite the unbroken procedure of the Senate, traced back to the Administration at least of President Grant, never deviated from on any occasion, and never before challenged. I therefore assume it to be true that this rule, thus construed through nearly half a century of unbroken sanction by the Senate, must be changed if we would change the manner of procedure in the Senate with reference to communications from Departments.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. CARTER. I do.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not apprehend that the rule of the Senate established for its own government, especially in such general language as this, can confer power on a Department officer. The President of the United States under the Constitution has the right to communicate to Congress at any time. The Secretary of the Treasury by statute has a right to communicate on certain subjects, to make reports to Congress; but I apprehend that under the law and also under the rules of the Senate no other departmental officer can communicate to the Senate except on the request or direction of the Senate.

Insensibly a practice has grown up here of allowing departmental officers to send in reports and communications in this informal way, addressed to the Vice-President or the Presiding Officer of the Senate, which he then lays before the Senate and refers them; but it is a mere custom. I do not think there is any warrant in law for it. It seems to me the proper way is to have all volunteer communications from Departments transmitted through the President, unless otherwise ordered by Congress. That seems to me the better manner of doing business of that kind. But this practice has grown up, as I have said, insensibly on the part of the Departments of sending in reports directly to the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will permit me, it is a practice which has grown up in one Department. Each one of the cases cited by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] which could in any sense be called a precedent comes from the Interior Department.

Mr. CARTER. Well, Mr. President, I desire, if the Senator will permit me a moment, to say that for the purpose of saving the time of the Senate I was rather brief in my citations, but I have here, for instance, directly in point the following communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, dated February 9, 1901——

Mr. ALDRICH. That was transmitted in pursuance of law.

Mr. CARTER. This is a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury submitting a proposed amendment to the legislative appropriation bill embracing general legislation, and not an estimate.

I have here a bill from the Secretary of Commeree and Labor in 1906, which was laid before the Senate. I have another from the Attorney-General of the United States submitting the draft of a bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Which Attorney-General was that?

Mr. CARTER. Hon. William H. Moody, Attorney-General. I am sure the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] will accept him as an authority worthy of grave consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Yes, on law, but not on the rules of the Senate.

Mr. CARTER. Under date of December 4, 1905, the Attorney-General communicates as follows—this is addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and was laid before the House in regular order of business as a communication. It was likewise sent to the Senate. I am informed that the practice is for all communications to be printed as addressed to the first House to which they happen to be presented, and each communication is presented in both Houses. This letter reads:

> Herewith inclosed is the draft of a proposed bill to repeal section 11, etc.

It goes into a lengthy statement of the reasons why the bill should become a law.

Mr. ALDRICH. Has the Senator any precedent prior to the present Administration of any communication of that character from any Department except the Department of the Interior?

Mr. CARTER. I assume that the Department of the Interior has not recently indulged in an innovation by communicating haphazard to Congress in a manner entirely dissimiliar from the methods heretofore employed. I do know that the Department of Commerce and Labor, the Department of Justice, the Treasury Department, the Interior Department, the War Department, and other Departments have been in the habit of communicating here precisely as the Secretary of the Interior communicated yesterday, and such communications have always been ordered printed and referred just as the communication received yesterday from the Secretary of the Interior was printed and referred.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think I was correct in saying that the habit has insensibly grown up, and that it also is spreading, on the part of heads of Departments to make voluntary communications or to volunteer communications directly to the Senate or to the House. I do not think it can be controverted that strictly those communications can only come through transmission by the President, and I think it is always well to be a little strict in the observance of the law and not to allow such irregular customs, even if apparently harmless, to grow up.

But certainly, Mr. President, the practice of submitting bills from the Departments without request to the two Houses is something quite recent, unless my memory is all astray, and that is a very much more important matter. In the references under discussion a series of drafts of bills were submitted which went directly from the desk of the President of the Senate to the committees. It was stated here the other day that on such bills the committee founded original legislation. No committee has authority to report original legislation and place it on the calendar or to report back a bill that has reached it in that irregular way. Under the rules a committee can only report back, either with an amendment in the nature of a substitute or with other amendments, or without amendment, a bill which has had two readings and gone to the committee in the regular course. No bill can go upon the calendar for a third reading without having taken a first and second. Yet here are bills going to these committees without any readings at all, and I think this practice might easily lead to further irregularities in legislation.

It is very proper that Congress should consult with the heads of Departments and Bureaus in the preparation of legislation, and that on the request of Congress or of a Committee of Congress, or of a member of either House, chiefs of Bureaus, or heads of Departments should have bills prepared which are to be introduced in the regular way by Senators or Representatives. But that is a very different thing from having the drafts of bills sent here by the heads of Departments for action by Congress without any apparent request.

The example which I am about to cite shows the trouble to which I think this practice may easily lead. There is a report or a communication from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting the draft of a bill for increasing the number of officers in the Army, and that will be followed, as I am informed, by a much more important bill, to increase the pay of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps. I think they are all included in one bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. And the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. LODGE. And the Revenue-Cutter Service. That is a measure of very great importance, to which Congress will have to give a great deal of attention this winter. As I understand it, a bill has been prepared by three officers in the War and Navy Departments, and that bill, if this example of the bill for additional officers is followed, will be or may be submitted to us in this way.

I had in my possession, and I regret to say that I have mislaid it, a circular from a captain in the Artillery Service named Hagood, discussing that bill for increase of pay. Apparently the circular was intended to be distributed through the services. It explains the bill and the nature of it, and it stated that the bill now met with general agreement and that no riders—by which I think he meant amendments—that no amendments must be placed upon it.

I read the circular with great astonishment, I confess, and it seemed to me that it showed the length to which this practice, if indulged in, might be carried. The author of the circular seemed to overlook the fact that the question of amending legislation or enacting legislation belongs here and in the other House.

I do not think, Mr. President, that that is good practice. It seems to me it is mixing up different Departments of the Government. I do not think it is quite the thing for an officer of the Army, charged, no doubt, with the propagation of correct opinions in regard to this legislation, to point out to the persons to whom the circular is addressed that there should be no riders or amendments put upon it. I do not know to whom that can apply except to the only power that can put riders or amendments on bills—the two Houses of Congress.

I think, Mr. President, it is just as well to put a stop to this submission of drafts of bills to Congress by subordinate executive officers or by heads of Departments unless they are thereto requested by one of the two Houses. I do not think that volunteering bills from the Executive Department is the proper method.

Of course, under the English system, the bills are prepared by the executive government, which is a committee in fact of the two Houses, and they prepare their own measures and introduce them. But here the Executive Department is distinct, and unless we ask for drafts of bills for our own convenience and for the promotion of good legislation, it seems to me that it is irregular, and unwisely irregular, to fall into the practice of having officers of the Executive Department present bills to Congress in this way.

Half a dozen came in the other day. They were referred to committees without taking any readings. They were referred to committees for consideration. Those bills have no Calendar number. They do not take the ordinary course of any other bills. I think it is an irregular way, both under the rules and under the statute.

I do not want to cut off the advantage that we have in getting officers of the Departments to draw proper bills for us. That is a duty which I hope they will always perform, on the request of the Houses. But I do not think that they ought to submit bills unasked for, which shall go in this irregular way to committees for consideration. If the head of a Department has legislation in which he is interested and presents it to the chairman of a committee or some other Senator, and he sees fit to introduce it, that of course is perfectly proper. The bill takes the usual course. But this is irregular, just as is this method of submitting reports. I do not care how long the custom has lasted, it is an irregularity which has grown up. If we are to have information volunteered from the Departments, let it come through the President of the United States, and any other information we want from the Departments we can ask for.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, at the risk of taking the time of the Senate, when I know Senators desire to engage in other business, I want to express the opinion that the motion to reconsider made by the Senator from Rhode Island should be adopted. Broadly put, the question is whether or not heads of Departments shall voluntarily communicate suggestions of legislation to either House of Congress, not in response to a legal requirement to make reports, not in response to resolutions adopted by one or the other of these bodies.

I have not had the time to examine the precedents, but apparently the practice has been to the contrary of what I have suggested. Yet whatever may have been the practice in the past upon that subject, I believe it ought to cease now, if it has been to the contrary of what I have said, and that communications from the heads of Departments should be made to the the Senate and to the House of Representatives only through the President, or under the laws which may be in existence, or in response to resolutions adopted by one or the other of the Houses; and that of course no person other than a member of this body should be permitted even by indirection to introduce a bill into the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] discloses a condition which, to my mind, is intolerable. We have certain officers in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps through a committee deciding upon a bill that Congress is to enact. Circulars are sent out that the proposed bill must not be amended or modified. The bill is then sent here gratuitously by the Acting Secretary of War for our approval and adoption. Are Senators ready to confess that they have not the ability to originate such legislation on this subject as, in their judgment, it is proper to enact?

So far as I am concerned personally, if we are to seek Executive sanction in advance of any legislation that may be proposed I desire to receive it at first hands, from the officer designated by the Constitution—from the President of the United States—and not from heads of Departments or heads of bureaus. If this practice is proper to be indulged in by heads of Departments, why not by heads of bureaus or by any of the various commissions created by Congress or by Executive act? I would suggest that there is a universal right of petition which applies to all citizens of the United States. But I seriously object to this manner of giving or seeking to give bills sent here as these have been the character of governmental measures.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] reminded me a few moments ago that the communications of this class during Mr. Cleveland's Administration were forwarded by the President and not sent directly to the Senate by the heads of Departments.

Mr. CARTER. With some exceptions.

Mr. ALDRICH. There was one exception, I think; but in the main they were forwarded through the President.

We are not here to receive suggestions, much less dictation, of any kind from any executive officer except the President as to what legislation we should originate or what we should do. We have grave responsibilities as legislators, and, for one, I am not ready to confess that I should receive instructions from heads of Departments either as to the form or the character of the legislation which I should support.

Mr. CARTER. Before the Senator takes his seat I should like to ask him a question. I will premise by saying that as to the Senator's position with reference to the propriety of communications in the manner in which they have been received there will be no division in the Chamber. I do think that the legislative branch of the Government has been exceedingly lax in allowing intrusions of various kinds into its procedure in formulating legislation.

But, Mr. President, we have a rule with over a quarter of a century of established usage and construction back of it, and I assure the Senator from Rhode Island that, in my humble judgment, that rule, with its established construction, can not be disposed of by a motion to reconsider in a given case. The practice has grown up in the House of Representatives as well as in the Senate, and it does seem to me that if the practice is to be discontinued in one branch of the Congress it should be at the same time discontinued in the other branch.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator refers to the other branch of Congress. I think I am correct in saying that when a communication of this kind reaches the House it is treated merely as a communication, the draft of a bill being a part of the communication; it is sent to a committee, and a member of the committee introduces a bill if he sees proper to do so. I think I am absolutely correct in making that statement.

Mr. CARTER. That, I believe, is the practice in the Senate also. I do not know of any deviation from it, although under the rule to which the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has just called my attention, it is proper for a committee of this body to present an original bill in this Chamber, and if that bill is not objected to, it is read a first and second time, and thereby gains a standing as though originally introduced by a Senator.

Mr. LODGE. But it has to take the first and second readings.

Mr. CARTER. Most assuredly.

Mr. LODGE. Subject to objection on each reading.

Mr. CARTER. Certainly, subject to objection. But, Mr. President, an original bill can be presented by a committee, subject to objection. A Senator may object to the reading of any bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to make a suggestion which I think will answer the Senator's objection. It is, that this motion shall lie upon the table for the present, to be taken up by the Senate hereafter, or else that we reconsider the vote by which the drafts of bills were referred and allow them to remain on the table until the Committee on Rules can pass upon this question.

Mr. CARTER. I will agree to that, and I will join the Senator in such an amendment of the rules of joint procedure as may preclude this practice from continuing in the future.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think, perhaps, the best disposition is to allow the motion to remain where it is. The references are now tied up by my motion, the understanding being the Committee on Rules shall take up this matter and undertake to provide some remedy which will be permanent and satisfactory to the Senate.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest to the Senator it will be probably necessary to take into consideration the joint rules of the two Houses.

Mr. ALDRICH. There are no joint rules of the two Houses.

Mr. CARTER. Otherwise we may find ourselves in an anomalous position.

Mr. ALDRICH. There are no joint rules now.

Mr. CARTER. There is a well-established method of procedure which is well understood between the Houses, and the recognized procedure is assumed to be equal to joint rules formally promulgated.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. I am through.

Mr. HEYBURN. I thought the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Rhode Island had reached an agreement to terminate the discussion, and I desired to make a few remarks.

Mr. CARTER. I am entirely willing that the Senator from Idaho shall proceed. I will merely suggest that it would be very strange to have a communication from the head of a Department received in the House of Representatives and refused consideration in the Senate. So whatsoever is done in the way of departing from this ancient practice should be so done as to result in uniform action on the part of both Houses.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it was not my intention at the time I raised this question to reflect in a censorious manner upon the action of any Department or the head of any Department of the Government. It is possible that by our own seeming acquiescence we have induced the heads of Departments to stray from the true path that should govern them in communicating with this body. It is unquestionably true that any communication from a Department of the Government should come to this body through the President of the United States, except under the provisions of an act of Congress which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury for certain limited purposes to communicate directly with Congress. That, of course, would be done whenever the communication was in the nature of a response to the act of Congress itself calling for that class of information.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the form in which the communication that is now the subject of consideration came to this body. It is entitled—

LAND PATENTS FOR SANTEE INDIANS.

Letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the draft of a bill to issue patents to Indians of the Santee tribe for lands assigned under the treaty of April 29, 1868.

* * * * * * *

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 9, 1907.

Then follows a statement of the purpose of the communication, which I will ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 9, 1907.

SIR: Under the treaty of April 29, 1868 (15 Stat. L., 637), 32,875 acres of land were located as homesteads for the Santee Indians in Nebraska. The law provided that they should receive agricultural lands and conditional patents therefor after they had made improvements to the amount of $200. The assignments made to those Indians turned out to be in many cases nonagricultural lands, and as the Indians displayed but little interest in their rights this unfortunate condition of affairs was not known in time to be remedied. As the survey of the reservation under which the assignments were made has proved to be faulty, and as the public-land surveys afterwards made of the lands which were allotted threw the assignments, in some cases, on lands that were not suitable for agricultural purposes, a number of these Indians have nominal title to lands or, perhaps, more correctly speaking, assignments, which prevents any other person from acquiring them, while the very nature of the lands assigned prevents the Indians from complying with the requirements of the treaty of 1868. As a result a number of these assignments are still unpatented, and no one can enter the lands, and the Indians can not acquire title.

In my judgment this state of affairs should be brought to an end, and it is only possible by the enactment of law authorizing the issuance of trust patents to such of the Indians as have not received a conditional patent to the lands they obtained under the treaty of 1868.

With this end in view I have caused to be prepared the inclosed draft of a bill, and recommend that it be enacted into law.

Very respectfully,

JAMES RUDOLPH GARFIELD,
Secretary.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

Mr. HEYBURN. The communication closes as follows:

With this end in view I have caused to be prepared the inclosed draft of a bill, and recommend that it be enacted into law.

It was that language, the recommendation that the accompanying draft of a bill be enacted into law, which first attracted my attention to the real character of the communication.

The communication is followed by this statement:

A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents to Indians of the Santee tribe for lands assigned under the treaty of April 29, 1868.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That—

Then follows the bill in what would seem to be apt language enough. My objection was directed to the practice involved in that communication of drawing a bill, recommending that it be enacted into law, and having it come to this body and be referred, as was this communication, to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered printed.

A member of this body can not under the rules, without the consent of the body, send to a committee a communication in reference to a bill that he has introduced. He may introduce a bill, with the accompanying papers, and they go to the committee, but if he desires to communicate to the committee in reference to the legislation which he has proposed he must do it with the consent of this body, so that every member of it may know just what has been injected into the minds of that committee for consideration. The purpose of requiring the first and second readings of a bill is that we may know definitely within this body, if not beyond it, just what our committees are considering.

Mr. FULTON rose.

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator surely does not mean to be understood as broadly as he states it, that a Senator may not communicate with a committee touching legislation pending before it. I suppose the Senator means that he may not communicate through the Senate without the consent of the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will make myself very plain in a moment, Mr. President, when I used the word "communicate" I of course meant to communicate officially. I could not send papers to the committee in support of a bill which I had introduced except that I introduce them here to accompany the bill. The committee would not consider papers received informally in connection with a bill before them. They must come through the executive office of this body, as I understand the rule. I do not know; committees may, perhaps, be somewhat lax in receiving papers and they may, perhaps, take notice of communications that come before them in an irregular way; but, as I understand the rule, they can only pass through the executive channel of the Senate.

Mr. FULTON. I think the Senator is evidently mistaken.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I think the Senator is mistaken in regard to that matter. I think it is the constant practice to send to a committee papers relating to a pending bill that is before the committee. I recall that I came near getting into a serious difficulty here during a previous session through my clerk having invited some Senators to introduce through the Senate communications of the character the Senator mentions, and not send them to the committee in an informal way. The matter was taken up on the floor by the Senator from Massachusetts, and attention was directed to the fact that it was perfectly proper, as I indeed thought it was, to send the communications directly to the committee. Any information a Senator may have or any paper he thinks important to be considered in connection with a pending bill before a committee he has a perfect right to send direct to the committee, and indeed I understand that that is the proper course.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think probably the difficulty arises from a misconception of what I include within my statement. I refer to the papers accompanying a bill. I take it any Senator is at liberty to send to a committee matter which constitutes an argument in favor of a bill or against it; but I refer to that class of papers upon which the legislation itself is based, for instance, statements and statistics that should have accompanied the original bill. But, however, that is merely a side issue. I was illustrating the importance of keeping strictly within our rules in the manner of referring and considering measures of proposed legislation.

When the Senator interrupted me I was proceeding to suggest that the purpose in requiring bills to be read the first and second times is that every member of this body shall at least have the opportunity of knowing every measure that is being presented to or considered by a committee. I do not believe there is any rule authorizing a bill to be reported by a committee in such a manner as to avoid the first and second readings of it in order that notice may be given to each member of this body. I think that the wisdom of the rule would be apparent on its face. It is that we may be at all times well advised as to what matters are being considered, in order that, should we desire to do so, we may appear before the committee or take such steps as would be appropriate to have the matter considered from a standpoint that may seem to us material.

Mr. President, whether it be the Secretary of the Interior or any other head of a Department, unless Congress especially authorizes them to communicate their views to this body, so far as I can learn there is no authority authorizing them to communicate with either of the bodies of Congress on any subject.

Rule VII, which has been referred to by the Senator from Montana, undoubtedly applies to communications in response to a request or an order issued by either House of Congress that a head of a Department shall give such information. That is the communication. The report that we may call for, or the communication, or whatever you may choose to denominate it, for they are synonymous terms, must come in response to a request. In other words, the wisdom of the rule is this, that we shall not have voluntary suggestions coming from a coordinate branch of the Government as to the wisdom of our action or as to the manner of the performance of our duties. That is the wisdom of the rule, and especially is it inappropriate that they should come here with a recommendation to us that it be enacted into law.

On a former occasion I objected to a communication from the same Department, I believe, where a committee had referred a bill to the Department for certain information, necessary, in the judgment of the committee, to a determination as to whether or not it should be reported favorably or unfavorably, and the response of the Department was accompanied by the recommendation that the bill be not enacted, but that it be rejected by the committee.

Now, it is no part of the duty or the province of any Department of the Government to participate in the legislation or in the legislative processes of this body. We are quite capable, in our own judgment and in that of the country, of framing and considering and enacting necessary legislation to meet every requirement, every contingency, and I think the sooner we adopt a rule that shall divorce the executive branch of the Government entirely from participation in the legislation of the country the more nearly we will have planted ourselves upon the original scheme of our Government, which wisely intended that there should be no merging or overlapping in the performance of those duties.

The Executive Departments have only the powers we give them. These Departments of the Government have no original powers resting on the organic law of the land. They have such powers and such rights and such duties as we confer upon them. They are there to execute the will of the people as expressed by Congress, which is the only tribunal under the Constitution that speaks the will of the people. If they confine themselves to that duty they will accomplish most fully the purpose for which the Departments were organized.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the motion to reconsider may be adopted, and if it is agreed to I will follow it with a motion that these various communications shall be referred to the Committee on Rules to determine the expediency of receiving communications of this kind; and I will say, as acting chairman of the committee, that we will take up the matter as soon as the new chairman is appointed, and undoubtedly dispose of it very promptly.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, before the matter is acted upon I desire to say simply a word.

I think the discussion has been very profitable and that it will lead to correct conclusions. The general proposition is a correct one that, except within the cases which have been enumerated here, all communications from the Executive Departments must come to us through the President.

But aside from that general proposition, the vital point in the matter has been more particularly touched by what has been said by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] with reference to the practice of framing bills by the Executive Departments and sending them to Congress with recommendations for enactment. It may seem to be a very small matter, but a little reflection will show us that to the extent that that practice becomes a general practice to the same extent is there a breaking down, as suggested by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], of the division which should correctly mark the distinction between the executive and legislative departments. If the practice shall increase—and certainly there is promise of it in the laying before the Senate of half a dozen bills at one time from two Executive Departments—if the practice shall increase to an extent so that it shall become general, it will not only become the habit of the legislative department to receive bills already framed, but it will soon become the habit of the legislative department to act upon such ready-made bills purely in accordance with the suggestion of the executive department.

Mr. President, in order that that may not seem to be a purely fanciful suggestion, I want to narrate something which I myself witnessed in a legislative body of another government. I have narrated it once before in the Senate, but I will narrate it again because it is so directly applicable to the present point under discussion.

I once visited for several days in succession in a foreign country the sittings of a legislative assembly which corresponds to our House of Representatives. The proceedings were in a language with which I am only partially familiar, but I was struck by the fact that no member of the assembly ever discussed any measure which was laid before the body. Day after day I attended the sessions, bills were presented, and in each case—it seemed it must have been the rule of the house—the vote was taken by yea and nay, and not by the usual viva voce. In each instance the bill was passed without any word of discussion, and by unanimous vote in the affirmative, no single bill receiving a negative vote. After having witnessed that proceeding for several days, and desiring some explanation for such a peculiar condition of affairs, I stationed myself at the door of the house at the time of adjournment, and addressed myself to a member who looked to me like a man who could speak English. My conjecture in that regard was correct, and I asked him to explain to me the reason for such peculiar methods; and then by way of illustration I said to him, "To-day I saw the officer who corresponds in our legislative bodies to the clerk read two bills to the house, each of which seemed to be a long and important bill; there was no discussion of either bill by any member, and when the vote was taken, in each instance every member when his name was called voted in the affirmative, and there was no negative vote cast." "Why," said he, "they were simply bills sent to us from the executive department making appropriations for the needs of the government, and there was nothing to discuss, and no need for any vote in the negative."

Now, Mr. President, that was an actual occurrence, witnessed by myself. If the time shall come when it shall grow to be the general practice of the Executive Departments to frame and send bills to each House of Congress with a recommendation for their enactment—when that general practice shall have grown into a general recognition of the fact by the legislative department that the executive department is the best qualified to judge of the needs of the Government—then there will naturally and surely follow the other practice of accepting these bills as things to be enacted into law without discussion and without negative votes. When that time comes, there will be little need left for the legislative department.

I do not know, Mr. President, without a more critical examination, whether our rules are defective or not. If they are, they ought to be corrected in this particular. I am inclined of the opinion that when properly construed they are sufficient as they are.

I desire to say, Mr. President, a single word, which I am sure reflects not only my own attitude but that of other Senators. There can be no possible intention to reflect, in what we have said or in the action which we take, upon the officers of the Executive Departments whose particular communications have given rise to this debate. I desire to say for myself that both those officers are, I think, exceptionally faithful and capable officers, and that for each of them personally and officially I entertain the highest regard.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the record now showing, I think, conclusively that the communication of yesterday was in the unbroken line of procedure; that the action of the Chair in making the reference to the Committee on Indian Affairs was in conformity with regular practice, not challenged as to correctness heretofore, and that consequently no reflection is cast upon the officer whose communication is here dealt with, and no reflection upon the Chair for making the reference in the manner it was made, I think the solution offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] is eminently fitting and proper; that the question raised and the whole subject-matter involved be referred to the Committee on Rules.

In order to suggest uniformity in the two Houses, I call attention to House Rule XXIV, which in so far as it relates to the matter here at issue, employs the identical language employed by the Senate rule on the same subject, to wit, "reports and communications from the heads of Departments." I likewise call attention to the rule relating to executive communications received in the House, which reads as follows:

Estimates of appropriations and all other communications from the Executive Departments intended for the consideration of any committees of the House shall be addressed to the Speaker, and by him referred as provided by clause 2 of Rule XXIV.

The practice in the House and Senate has been the same.

The Committee on Rules is manifestly the proper committee of the Senate to take this entire matter in charge, because on the precedents set we can scarcely retrace steps by one motion to reconsider.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair may be indulged for a word. Of course the Chair has nothing to do with regard to the wisdom of the rules of the Senate or the practice which has heretofore obtained under them. A careful search of the record has disclosed the fact that the practice now under consideration has continued for many years and that the present is the first occasion when the propriety of it has been challenged, so far as the Chair is advised.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island to reconsider the vote by which the several communications were referred.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the several communications be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The motion was agreed to.

AFFAIRS OF MEXICAN KICKAPOO INDIANS.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, at the last session of the last Congress, on the 12th day of February, the Senate passed a resolution which I ask to have read, preparatory to making a report from the committee appointed under it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 261, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, reported by Mr. KEAN, without amendment, February 12, 1907, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution No. 220, second session, Fifty-ninth Congress, be amended and modified so as to read as follows:

"The Committee on Indian Affairs is hereby authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to take, and have printed, testimony for the purpose of ascertaining all the facts with reference to the affairs of the Mexican Kickapoo Indians. Said committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to sit during sessions or recess of the Senate, either at Washington or elsewhere, as may be deemed advisable; the expenses of the investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate."

Mr. TELLER. Under that resolution the Committee on Indian Affairs appointed a subcommittee of three, composed of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], and myself. We went to the State of Oklahoma, the State of Texas, and the Territory of Arizona; we spent four weeks and a little over, traveled nearly 6,000 miles, took the testimony of 140 witnesses, and we are now ready to submit our report.

Before submitting the report I desire to say that although I was chairman of the committee I wish to give credit to the junior Senator from Kansas, who practically did the work of the committee. The senior Senator from Wisconsin was sick and unable to attend, and feeling that the Senator from Kansas was thoroughly competent to deal with the questions, I asked him to take the lead in the investigation, which he kindly did. The report which I submit is practically the report drawn by him.

The committee have directed me to ask the Senate to have this report read, so that it may go into the RECORD. It is brief. Therefore I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the report which I now send to the desk may be read.

There being no objection, the report was read, as follows:

Your committee, which was authorized and directed to fully investigate the affairs of the Mexican Kicking Kickapoo Indians and all affairs connected therewith, beg leave to submit the following report:

In carrying out the instructions of the Senate, your committee took evidence at Eagle Pass, Tex., Douglas, Ariz., Shawnee, Okla., and also at Washington, D. C., and, in addition, it had before it the evidence which had been taken by the full committee during the month of February, 1907.

Your committee found that certain persons claimed to have secured four classes of deeds to lands in Oklahoma which belonged to the Mexican Kickapoo Indians, two classes taken by those whom your committee will designate the Bentley people, composed of Martin J. Bentley, Ida B. Bentley, and W. W. Ives, and two were taken by those that your committee will designate as the "Chapman-Grimes-Conine people," composed as follows: Charles J. Benson, W. L. Chapman, L. C. Grimes, and Al. Brown. This was a partnership, the money having been furnished by Charles J. Benson. Another partnership was composed of Willard Johnstone, C. M. Cade, Russell Johnson, and L. C. Grimes. For this partnership the money was furnished by Willard Johnstone and C. M. Cade. The third party was composed of John Garrett, James Jacobs, L. C. Grimes, and Dr. R. C. Conine. The money used for the purposes of this partnership was furnished by John Garrett.

These three parties will be designated by your committee as the "Chapman-Grimes-Conine people."

We desire first to direct the attention of the Senate to the conduct of those parties whom we have designated as the Chapman, Grimes, and Conine people. They claimed to have secured two sets of deeds from the Mexican Kickapoo Indians, one set executed, as they claimed, before certain officers in Eagle Pass, Tex., and one set, as they claimed, executed before F. Valdes Llano, first judge of letters of the Monclova district court in the Republic of Mexico. These last deeds, it is claimed, were executed in the town of Muzquiz at the house of Alberto Guajardo, the jefe politico of that district. These Chapman, Grimes, and Conine people had as their active workers on the ground W. L. Chapman, L. C. Grimes, R. C. Conine, W. C. Grimes, Russell Johnson, Al. Brown, Cal. Moore, John Garrett, and later Tony Alexander. They were ably assisted by Mexican officials, Indian interpreters, and others whose conduct will be referred to hereafter.

Your committee does not hesitate to say that the conduct of the men who were on the ground representing the Chapman-Grimes-Conine people in their efforts to secure the valuable lands owned by the Mexican Kickapoo Indians in Oklahoma, was criminal and brutal in the extreme. Outrages were shamelessly perpetrated by them, and their conduct has never been equaled in the history of any dealings to secure lands from the American Indians. The names of the Indians were willfully and deliberately forged to the deeds claimed to have been taken in Mexico. Two or three instances are sufficient to show to what extremes they went. They had all the leading members of the tribe, or headmen of the tribe, arrested and thrown into jail. They then took a large number of Indians by force and under guard of policemen to the said Guajardo's house in Muzquiz, where they urged the Indians to sell their lands, which the Indians declined to do, telling them invariably that they did not desire to sell their lands, and under no circumstances would they sign any papers; yet these people claim to have deeds executed at Guajardo's house by those Indians. The Indians all say that they did not sign, and the Indian interpreters, used upon the different occasions, each says that the Indians did not sign their names, touch the pen, or authorize anyone to sign their names or touch the pen for them.

The circumstances sustain the claims of the Indians, for the Chapman, Grimes, and Conine people claim to have a deed which was executed at the said Guajardo's house by an Indian woman named Pah-natho, who had been dead for more than five years preceding the making of the alleged deed. They claim another deed to have been executed by an Indian named Paw-kaw-kah, who was a known imbecile, who could not utter a word or make a sound, and to whom no member of the tribe could talk or make himself understood. They also claimed to have a deed from an Indian named Mah-to-pene, who was not in Muzquiz nor was he at the Indian camp at the time of the alleged execution of the said deed. They claim also to have deeds executed at Guajardo's house by seven Indians who were at the time at the camp, and who never were at the house above mentioned.

The items of the Indian appropriation bill under which these deeds are claimed to have been taken limit the execution of such deeds to adults and to such Indians as are nonresidents of the United States, while the Chapman, Grimes, and Conine people claim to have deeds from certain Indians whom the records show were at the time and are now minors, and whom any person could tell were minors by simply looking at them. In cases where guardians had charge of the real property of the Indian minors, in order to get rid of the guardian and to avoid the law which limits the execution of deeds to adults, these Chapman, Grimes, and Conine people procured the marriage of the minors at Eagle Pass, Tex., the Indians so married having no intention of getting married, and, as the testimony shows, have not lived together since the time of said marriages, and it is evident that they did not know what they were doing at the time. These marriages were brought about by the Chapman, Grimes, and Conine people to the end that they might secure deeds from Indian minors and rob them of their lands.

It is shown by the evidence that L. C. Grimes, who was a partner of the three different combinations above referred to, had one of the Indians taken from the jail, paid his fine for drunkenness, and procured the marriage license under which he was married and defrayed all the expenses incident thereto. It is shown that he paid the expenses in at least two of the cases. It is also shown that he procured a drunken Indian interpreter to make oath that one of the Indian boys, who was at the time but 17 years of age, was 21, and that another Indian boy, who at the time of said alleged marriage was but 19, was over 21 years of age.

The Indians were paid no money for the land for which the Chapman, Grimes, and Conine people claim to have deeds, and which they claim were executed at said Guajardo's house in Mexico, but some time after it is alleged the deeds were executed these people placed money to the credit of each Indian at the First National Bank of Eagle Pass, Tex. The evidence further shows that Mr. Tony Alexander, heretofore referred to, was employed and sent to Mexico for the purpose of inducing the Indians to withdraw the money from the bank, in which, however, he was unsuccessful. The evidence does show that he and other parties representing the Chapman, Grimes, and Conine people did present fictitious Indians who impersonated the Indians who had money in the bank, and in this manner drew out some of the said money.

The evidence further shows beyond any doubt that the Chapman-Grimes people, through Doctor Conine and Tony Alexander, both of whom were in the employ of the Chapman, Grimes, and Conine people, and Indian interpreters, deliberately forged the names of certain other Indians to checks on the said bank and drew some of the money out of the bank. In one case they signed the name of an Indian, Ma-ka-seah, who had left Eagle Pass, Tex., during the last week of November, 1906, had gone direct to Shawnee, Okla., and had not been out of Oklahoma since, and yet they have a check purported to have been signed by this Indian at Eagle Pass, Tex., January 1, 1907, for $550, witnessed by Mack Johnson, an Indian interpreter, whom the evidence shows they kept in a drunken condition all the time, and who testified that he witnessed a blank check. This check is also witnessed by one A. J. Santos, of Muzquiz, Mexico, who seems to have been used generally for the purpose of witnessing forged checks, and it is indorsed by R. C. Conine.

In regard to the deeds taken by the Chapman-Grimes-Conine people at Eagle Pass, the evidence shows that the Indians and interpreters were liberally supplied with whisky, beer, and mescal; that they were made drunk and were kept in that condition and taken to Eagle Pass, where they were herded or kept in a wagon yard and at last coerced into signing deeds. In each case but a very small amount of money was paid to the different Indians who executed the deeds, and in no case was the amount paid anywhere near the value of the land, and, too, in but few cases, if any, was a description of the land which the parties claimed they were buying from the Indian read to him, and the Indian was not made acquainted with the contents of alleged deed nor of the land which he was selling.

The treatment of these Indians by the Chapman, Grimes, and Conine people, whom they took to Eagle Pass, was outrageous, and the treatment of the Indian women by these same people at Muzquiz was such as to condemn them in the eyes of all decent people.

To further show the conduct of the Chapman-Grimes-Conine people your committee desires to call the attention of the Senate to the testimony of E. H. Schmidt, who was cashier of the First National Bank at Eagle Pass, the bank in which the Chapman, Grimes, and Conine people kept their account, and the bank through which they operated. Mr. Schmidt, in his testimony, says:

I said, "Gentlemen, you can not make this place your headquarters to pow wow with these Indians."

The CHAIRMAN. Who were you talking to when you said that?

Mr. SCHMIDT. To Chapman and Brown and Grimes and the whole business.

Senator CURTIS. Chapman, Brown, Grimes, and Conine?

Mr. SCHMIDT. All those people. I told them they could not transact their business in there. The first day they came there and attempted to take deeds I had two men around there guarding. They would all run out and in and I said, "Gentlemen, you can not do this," and I consulted with one of the officers there, and we both told them. They said, "We have our money here," and I said, "I do not care; take your money and get out."

Senator CURTIS. Their conduct was such that you did not want them there?

Mr. SCHMIDT. There were Indians running in and out, and we did not understand it, and did not like it, in fact.

Your committee desires to call the attention of the Senate also to the testimony of M. W. C. Douglas, as follows:

Senator CURTIS. Why did you stop taking acknowledgments for the Grimes people?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Well, because I did not like the way they seemed to be accomplishing their purpose.

Senator CURTIS. What did you notice with regard to that?

Mr. DOUGLAS. You understand it was not until after I made this trip to Muzquiz, and what I saw there is what influenced me. I did not care to take any more.

Again, to indicate to what extent the Chapman, Grimes, and Conine people would go in their practices, we desire to call the attention of the Senate to the evidence of Mr. Douglas with reference to the acknowledgments. Mr. Cresson asked the following questions:

Mr. CRESSON. Does your acknowledgment in each case show that the man who made his mark was introduced by So and So, and "personally well known to me?"

Mr. DOUGLAS. No, sir.

Mr. CRESSON. Then your acknowledgment is not in conformity with the Texas law, is it?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes, sir; entirely.

Mr. CRESSON. Does not the Texas State law require that when a man is introduced to you, for instance, an Indian introduced to you, that you shall say "well known to me," or "introduced to me by?"

Mr. DOUGLAS. If you will just change the word to "provide" instead of "require" I will say yes. There is a provision in the statute under which we take such acknowledgment as that; there is no requirement, however, if a notary feels that he knows a man, even though he has been introduced to him but a half a minute before, if he feels he is reliably informed, he can say "known to me;" in other words, there is no definite period of time in which a man must be known to another to say he is known to me.

Mr. CRESSON. In all these deeds you felt confident you knew it was the identical Indian and put your acknowledgment to it that you knew it to be the identical Indian?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will say that in the beginning I took that matter up with Mr. Chapman and Mr. Russell Johnstone, and wanted to make my acknowledgment in that form, but they said there was no provision in Oklahoma State recognizing that, and that it would only be necessary to state "known to me," so I took every precaution that I could to be satisfied in my own mind that it was the identical Indian. After the first few, however, I got to seeing the Indians and felt that I knew them somewhat, although probably I could not point out half of them by name whose acknowledgments I took.

These Chapman, Grimes, and Conine people also took deeds from Indians, who were not nonresidents of Oklahoma, Indians whom they took to Mexico for the express purpose of securing deeds to their lands. Most of those Indians returned to Oklahoma and never were actual and bona fide residents of Mexico, all of which was well known at the time to the people who took them to Mexico for the purpose of securing deeds to their valuable land.

To show to what measures the Chapman-Grimes-Conine people resorted, your committee desires to call the attention of the Senate to their conduct in securing the deed from Pah-pah-me-na-ko-the. This Indian was attempting to return to Oklahoma, when he was arrested upon a mock charge of having killed another Indian, who was then, and still is, alive. This arrest was made by Mexican police officers, who were, no doubt, in the pay of the Chapman, Grimes, and Conine people. He was put in chains and, of course, at the opportune moment, representatives of the Chapman, Grimes, and Conine people appeared and expressed great surprise at the man's arrest, and took him from the officers, telling him if he would execute a deed to them for one piece of property for $3,000, that they would secure his discharge and prevent him from going to the penitentiary.

The Indian told those people that he would sell them allotment No. 54 for $3,000, which was an inherited piece of property. The papers were supposed to have been prepared for the conveyance of this piece of land. The interpreter, who was under their pay, and who had been taken to Mexico by the Chapman-Grimes-Conine people, informed him that he was selling but one piece of land—an 80-acre tract. The Indian touched the pen and was paid $3,000. It afterwards turned out that he had deeded them seven tracts of land, and the equity of this Indian in the land covered by this deed would be worth at least $15,000.

Your committee regrets to say that it is led to believe that the Chapman, Grimes, and Conine people were materially assisted in their efforts by the unfortunate appearance of F. A. Thackery, United States Indian agent at Shawnee, Okla., and of George A. Outcelt, who was assistant United States attorney, and who was sent to Mexico to make certain investigations, while Mr. Thackery was sent there to assist him and to make certain payments of lease money to the Kickapoo Indians. The Chapman, Grimes, and Conine people appeared on the ground at about the same time; they were from the same section in Oklahoma, and they employed the same Mexican interpreter, Dr. R. C. Conine, and the Mexican officials, and the Indians were led to believe that they were acting all together.

It was very unfortunate, too, that Mr. Outcelt and the Chapman-Grimes-Conine people stopped at the same hotel and went to and from the Indian camp in the same coaches and were seen together frequently by Mexican officials. This made the Indians distrustful of Outcelt, and let the Mexican officials to believe that the United States Government officials were not opposing the Chapman-Grimes-Conine people.

Upon the arrival of your committee in Shawnee the Chapman-Grimes-Conine people tried to explain their conduct by pretending that Doctor Conine was representing the Indians, but your committee can reach no other conclusion than that this was a put-up job by the Chapman, Grimes, and Conine people weeks after they deposited the money in the banks and after the Indians refused to draw it out, because the Indians did not know and had not authorized Doctor Conine, or any of the people whom he represented, to buy lands for them in Mexico, and to show that it was impossible for Doctor Conine to have represented the Indians it is sufficient to call attention to the fact that he was under the pay of these people at $150 a month, and the evidence further shows that he was a partner in one of the transactions and secured in his own name a deed to several pieces of property, or claims to have secured deeds to several pieces of property, and his conduct in securing the same was not that of an honorable man, or that of a man who was in any wise representing the Indians, and to further show that he could not have been representing the Indians the testimony of all of the Indians is to the effect that whenever Chapman, Grimes, Conine, Al. Brown, or any of the parties representing those people appeared, the Indians uniformly referred to them as "wolves," and would have nothing to do with them unless they were accompanied by a Mexican policeman, by whom they feared arrest.

The telegrams printed in the record show that Doctor Conine was one of the leaders of the Chapman-Grimes people in their efforts to rob the Indians of their valuable lands. The evidence shows his activity while they were trying to secure deeds.

The following message will show his activity when they were trying to induce the Indians to draw the money from the bank.

EAGLE PASS, TEX., May 1, 1907.

A. T. BROWN, Shawnee, Okla.:

Let us know what you are going to do. Those checks of Alexander will have to be taken care of. He is here. If you are not going to put up some coin you had better quit and I will, too.

R. C. CONINE.

Then, later, when the depositions were taken, he was the man upon whom they relied to do their work in Mexico, and he is the man to whom they had $500 in gold sent, which was necessary for him to have before he could get the depositions. Conine represented the Chapman-Grimes people beyond any question.

The evidence taken by your committee shows that the partnership of which C. J. Benson was the head, and for which he furnished all the money, expended all told about $31,000; that the partnership which was headed by Willard Johnston and Cash Cade furnished for all purposes about $13,000; that the partnership headed by John Garrett furnished for all purposes about $7,000. This represents their total expenditures. Of this $51,000, $19,000 was placed in the bank to the credit of the Indians who never claimed it, and who have not drawn it from the bank, making a total outlay by these people of about $32,000, for which they claim to have deeds for lands in Oklahoma, which at the very least was worth $250,000, and in the judgment of your committee this land, under proper management, would realize at least $300,000.

The evidence taken before your committee is conclusive that these Chapman, Grimes, and Conine people deliberately bought Mexican officials to assist them in their nefarious and criminal practices. There is evidence to the effect that L. C. Grimes told one of the witnesses that they had paid Alberto Guajardo, a Mexican official, $75 Mexican money for each deed executed, and the dispatches show that while these people claim that they did not pay out a cent of money to the Indians for deeds executed in Mexico, yet they telegraphed the bank to send them by express $2,000 Mexican money, which was three days before the first deeds were claimed to have been executed. Another piece of evidence which shows to what extent these people went in order to influence officers in Mexico are the telegrams that passed between them while they were taking depositions in Mexico in order to sustain their forged deeds. Here is one of the telegrams:

MUZQUIZ, May 8, 1907.

W. L. CHAPMAN AND BROWN, Shawnee, Okla.:

Absolutely necessary have First National, Eagle Pass, honor my check $500 gold to secure depositions. Have bank notify Monclova bank. Will do our best. Answer here quick.

R. C. CONINE.

We think it only just to the parties concerned to say that two of the partnerships represented by the Chapman-Grimes-Conine people were financed by bank officials of two banks at Shawnee, Okla., and that the other partnership was financed by a man who had formerly been a saloon keeper and a gambler; that while your committee was in session at Shawnee the saloon keeper and gambler admitted that he had not paid what the land was worth, and said that he was perfectly willing to have the land appraised and to pay its fair and reasonable value, while the bankers who furnished the money insisted that they had paid a reasonable price for the land, and would not agree to pay the appraised value of the same, and insisted that they should be protected in their investments, and preferred to make a reasonable profit. The evidence shows that the combined property purchased by the bank officials and their partners is worth over $125,000, and the Indians were not actually paid by the said parties combined to exceed $20,000 cash. To show the extent of the misuse of money, we call attention to the transaction of the partnership to which the banker, Benson, furnished funds. The bank account shows that he deposited to the credit of the Indians without their knowledge and consent for forged deeds, $19,000, while his expenses in securing those deeds amounted to about $12,000.

As to the conduct of Martin J. Bentley, and those associated with him, your committee desires to say that Mr. Bentley, W. W. Ives, and Mrs. Ida B. Bentley have two sets of deeds which they have shown by evidence were taken by them from the Indians in trust. One class consists of deeds to seven allotments from which restrictions were removed and patents directed to be issued by act of March 3, 1905. The second class of deeds taken under the act of June 21, 1906. All those deeds, with the exception of one, were executed in Eagle Pass, and that one was executed before an American officer in Mexico. In investigating the conduct of Martin J. Bentley, your committee took much testimony, and although it was a subject not within the scope of the resolution, opened up the whole question with respect to his conduct with the Kickapoo Indians from the time he was appointed their agent in 1896 until the present time. Mr. Bentley was charged with having encouraged and induced the Mexican Kickapoo Indians to go to Mexico, and it was alleged that his object and purpose in getting them to so remove was to get from them their valuable lands in Oklahoma without paying anything therefor.

The evidence taken does not in any regard sustain this charge except, perhaps, that during the last few years, according to the testimony of a number of the Indians, he has assisted and encouraged them to go to Mexico, because, as asserted by him, conditions in Oklahoma had become intolerable. It was shown by the testimony of the Indians that many of them had been in Mexico forty and fifty years ago; that when they were returned to the United States many relatives were left behind in Mexico; that they had been in the habit of going back and forth; that prior to the time Mr. Bentley was appointed their agent it was hard to keep them on their reservation in Oklahoma, and that during the time he acted as their agent some of them had settled upon and developed their allotments and had become self-sustaining, thrifty, and progressive Indians; that after his term of office had expired as their agent they again, by reason of the surroundings, concluded that they wanted to go to Mexico, and it was not until after that time, the evidence shows, that Mr. Bentley in any way encouraged or assisted them. The evidence further shows that while the first seven allotments which were deeded to the Bentley people were very valuable, still neither Mr. Bentley nor those connected with him do now, and never have, claimed to have the absolute title, but they do claim that they simply took the property in trust for the purpose of selling it for the best price obtainable and to invest the proceeds in lands in Mexico for the Kickapoo Indians, which said land was to be held in common. This is shown by written contracts deposited with the bank where the Indians transact their business.

From the sale of these lands the evidence shows that the Bentley people received from these seven pieces something like $20,000 in cash, and there is now on deposit in the bank at Shawnee about $17,000 as the proceeds from the sale of three allotments, leaving four undisposed of. Out of this money, and other moneys which will be hereafter referred to, Mr. Bentley did purchase a tract of land for temporary purposes in Mexico, for which he paid about $13,000, and had an option for the purchase of a large ranch when these complications arose. Of those seven allottees the committee took the evidence of six, and it is perfectly apparent to your committee that there was a thorough and complete understanding between said allottees and Mr. Bentley as to what he was to do with their property in Oklahoma and what was to be done with the proceeds therefrom. Those seven Indians, or rather the six examined of the seven, appeared to be the leading members of the Kicking Kickapoo band.

As to the deeds taken by the Bentley people under the act of June 21, 1906, Mr. Bentley testified, as well as those who were interested with him, that they did not claim any title to the land, but that they were holding the property in trust for the Indians, expecting to sell the same where the Indians did not desire to return to Oklahoma and invest the proceeds in a reservation in Mexico, and a binding declaration of trust so shows. Some of those Indians from whom it was claimed by Mr. Bentley that he had deeds under the act of June 21, 1906, testified that they did not know that they were giving a deed to the Bentley people, but that they did believe that they were placing the land in his hands for the purpose of exchanging it for land in Mexico, and when asked what they had done with their land, instead of saying that they had deeded it, they insisted that they had turned it over to him, but had not sold it to him.

In all the conduct of the Bentley people in securing deeds from the Indians there is no evidence whatever that he used any intoxicants of any kind or character, or forced the Indians to sign deeds, or that he used any undue influence, or committed any acts of forgery or perjury or any other improper acts. The evidence further shows that while the Chapman, Grimes, and Conine people were wrongfully using the power of Mexican officers and a liberal supply of intoxicants and adopting all kinds of criminal tactics to induce the Indians to leave their camp in Mexico and go to Texas to execute deeds, Mr. Bentley was using all lawful means to protect them against these outrages and to guard their property, and the Indians, in many cases, voluntarily went to Eagle Pass for the purpose of meeting him and turning their land over to him for the purpose, as they stated, of having the same exchanged for land in Mexico.

It further appears that many of the deeds taken by Mr. Bentley under the act of June 21, 1906, were taken simply for the purpose of protecting the Indians against what has been denominated as the Chapman-Grimes-Conine people, and he does not claim, and has never claimed, any interest whatever in those lands, and he further testified that he was ready and willing to turn the lands over to said parties at any time when it would be safe to do so. It is charged that Mr. Bentley, by reason of his influence with those Indians, has secured and handled large sums of money belonging to them. The evidence does show that he secured from those Indians many thousands of dollars, but in each case he has given to the Indians a note or a proper evidence of indebtedness. In some cases the Indians have turned over to him a part of their payments for the purposes of devoting them to the common or general fund of the tribe. Those accounts have been kept separate and the books of the bank at Eagle Pass, Tex., as well as the receipts given by Mr. Bentley, fully indicate the purpose for which the money was to be used. The money borrowed by Mr. Bentley from the Indians has, from time to time, been repaid.

While your committee does not approve of all the things which have been done with respect to the handling of the money by Mr. Bentley, yet it is satisfied from the testimony that he has handled the same and managed whatever money has been turned over to him in the manner which he felt was for the best interest of the Indians; and whatever errors he committed were errors of judgment due in many cases to his zeal in protecting the Indians' interest, and there is no evidence whatever that he has diverted the said funds or any part thereof from their proper use. Your committee believes that it would have been better, if it had been possible to have done so, to have had the money which had been paid to the Indians in large sums invested in some property that would have yielded them a monthly or yearly return. This was not done by Mr. Bentley, but he explained that he would have preferred to have done so, but it was impossible, because the Indians were frequently appealing to him for money and were being urged by many to withdraw their money from him, and that he had no assurance that the money would be left with him a sufficient length of time to warrant an investment of the funds for the Indians.

The evidence shows that Mr. Bentley has received from land and other property which would go to the common fund of the Indians the sum of $37,209.91, and that he has expended for them the sum of $45,260. Mr. Bentley was charged with misconduct while he was agent, and since that time, in securing the cancellation of certain alleged erroneous allotments. While your committee did not feel that this was a matter that it was charged to investigate, it nevertheless heard all the testimony that was submitted on that subject. The evidence shows that in one case while agent Mr. Bentley took part in having an erroneous allotment canceled, and he dictated a contract by the terms of which the party seeking to secure said erroneous allotment as a homestead was to pay over to Mr. W. W. Ives, the present trustee for the Indians, the sum of $500 in case he secured an entry.

Your committee believes that Mr. Bentley, in his desire to properly serve the Indians in this regard, went further than he should have gone while acting as an agent, yet he and the Indians testified that this was done to secure what was known as a "fight or expense fund" for the Indians and that he, Bentley, was not to derive any benefit therefrom. While your committee is satisfied that in this regard Mr. Bentley made a mistake for which he should be criticised, yet the evidence warrants the committee in the conclusion that he did it in his zeal to do something beneficial to the Indians.

There was considerable evidence taken by your committee upon the subject of the cancellation of erroneous allotments and Mr. Bentley's connection therewith, but as that was not a subject which your committee was directed to investigate we will make no further reference to it in our report, contenting ourselves simply with a reference to the record.

As to the charge that Mr. Bentley has induced the Indians to go to Mexico, as heretofore mentioned in this report, there is no doubt in the minds of the committee that during the last four or five years he has encouraged them to go and assisted to that end, and he testifies that he is still willing to aid and assist certain full-blood Indians to go to Mexico if they desire so to do. It is perfectly apparent, however, to your committee that those Kicking Kickapoo Indians who are now in Mexico have not expressed a desire to return to the United States, and it is doubtful, even if they were brought back by force, that they would remain in the United States any longer than it would take them to get away. Of the large number who testified on the stand, not a single Indian expressed a desire to return to Oklahoma, but each one stated that he would rather live in Mexico, where there was plenty of game and where they could all live together and hold their land in common in the old way.

Your committee has caused to be printed in the record copies of all the telegrams which it could secure that passed between the parties involved in these various transactions. It has also placed in the record for the information of the Senate the checks which it is claimed were signed by the Indians. It is submitted that these messages and checks fully corroborate and substantiate the testimony of the Indians and sustain the charges made by the representatives of the Indians against the Chapman, Grimes, and Conine people.

In concluding the part of this report which refers to the conduct of the various parties to these transactions your committee calls attention to the fact that the evidence shows that some of those who were on the ground representing the parties which have been designated as the Chapman, Grimes, and Conine people in their efforts to secure deeds were guilty of debauching the Indians by liberally supplying them with intoxicants; that they were cruel, and used all kinds of force, and resorted to the crimes of forgery, bribery, perjury, and subornation of perjury, while, on the other hand, the evidence shows that the Bentley people, composed of Martin J. Bentley, Mrs. Ida B. Bentley, W. W. Ives, and the assistants whom they had on the ground, in no case used or permitted to be used among the Indians intoxicating liquors, but, on the other hand, when the Indians were in trouble they aided and assisted them out of their difficulties; that while they secured deeds for very valuable land, and while large sums of money were turned over to Mr. Bentley, there has not been shown any evidence of force, or treachery, or other culpable conduct on the part of Mr. Bentley or any of those associated with him, but, on the contrary, it is shown that he has been ever watchful and zealous in the interests of these Kickapoo people.

Before closing this report we desire to call especial attention to Mr. E. E. Hood, a young attorney of Shawnee, who, through one of the Grimes parties above referred to, secured deeds to two pieces of land.

Mr. Hood appeared before the committee and of his own volition stated that he had paid but a very small consideration for one of the tracts, and that he stood ready and willing to pay what the land would be shown to be worth; that the other piece was taken in his name without his knowledge or consent, and he was ready to deed this piece back, as he claimed no interest in it.

We especially refer to this, because his conduct shows him to be an honorable and upright man.

Your committee recommend:

1. That suits be brought to set aside all deeds executed, or claimed to have been executed under the following provision of the act of June 21, 1906, to wit: "All restrictions as to sale and incumbrance of all lands, inherited and otherwise, of all adult Kickapoo Indians, and of all Shawnee, Delaware, Caddo, and Wichita Indians who have heretofore been or are now known as Indians of said tribes, affiliating with said Kickapoo Indians now or hereafter nonresident in the United States, who have been allotted land in Oklahoma or Indian Territory are hereby removed: Provided, That any such Indian allottee who is a nonresident of the United States may lease his allotment without restriction for a period not exceeding five years: Provided further, That the parent or the person next of kin having the care and custody of a minor allottee may lease the allotment of said minor as herein provided, except that no such lease shall extend beyond the minority of said allottee," except in cases where the grantee admits he holds such deed or deeds in trust for the said Indians, and in those cases the attorney hereinafter referred to shall see that a proper declaration of trust is executed by the parties now holding title to said Indian lands that have been secured from said Indians, with the purpose of exchanging the same for other lands, or selling such lands held, and investing the proceeds of such sale in lands in Mexico or elsewhere as the Indians may desire and take all proper steps to enforce such trust and protect the rights of said Indians and the Government.

2. That a special attorney, not heretofore connected with the investigation of Kickapoo affairs in Mexico, be employed by the Department of Justice, to have sole charge of the above cases, with authority to select his own assistants, and take such steps as may be necessary for the protection of the Mexican Kickapoo Indians, and promptly recover for them the lands from the parties claiming to hold title under the above provision of the said act, except the parties holding lands in trust for said Kickapoo Indians.

3. That in view of existing conditions patents be immediately issued to the seven Indian allottees as directed in the act of March 3, 1905, and that the special attorney be directed to examine the title to any tract or tracts of land which may be purchased or secured by exchanging in Mexico or elsewhere for the use of the Kicking Kickapoo Indians, and that in these seven cases that said attorneys shall see that a declaration of trust is properly executed by said parties holding said Indian land and take all steps necessary to protect the interest of the said Indians.

We find that the persons whom we have designated as belonging to the Chapman, Grimes, and Conine people, and all those claiming under them, secured their said pretended title by acts of violence, corruption, fraud, intimidation, and debauchery, and some by committing the crime of forgery, and that they have no valid titles, but the deeds they hold are such a cloud upon the title that it is the duty of the Government to at once bring action to set the same aside.

The treaty under which the Kickapoo allotments were made provides that the title thereto shall be held in trust for the benefit of the allottees for a period of twenty-five years, in the manner and to the extent provided for in the act of February 8, 1887. In construing that act the Supreme Court has held that the lands were held by the United States in execution of its plans relating to the Indians without any right in the Indian to make contracts in reference to them or to do more than to occupy and cultivate them. That by the terms of the act the Government had agreed at a named time to convey the land to the allottees in fee, discharged of the trust and free of all charge and incumbrance whatever.

It seems to your committee, from the decisions of the Supreme Court, that the United States is to hold the lands in trust for a period of twenty-five years from the date of allotment, for the sole use and benefit of the allottee, and the Government is to hold the same until the fee is conveyed and the trust is discharged. This trust period may be extended by the President, and it may be shortened only by act of Congress, and this can be done only by a positive grant or the directing of the issuance of a patent in fee. Your committee doubts if the provision of the act of June 21, 1906, is strong enough to pass the title from the Government to the several allottees.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATIONS BY COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I ask that Senate resolutions No. 26 and No. 27 be laid before the Senate, as I wish to discuss them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate, at the request of the Senator from South Carolina, the resolutions heretofore submitted by him.

The Secretary read the first resolution submitted by Mr. TILLMAN on the 9th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to investigate and report to the Senate—

First. Whether the issue of the certificates of indebtedness, bearing 3 per cent interest, bids for which were invited by the Secretary of the Treasury on November 18, 1907, were for the purpose of borrowing money to "meet public expenditures," as provided by section 32 of the act approved June 13, 1898; and if not, whether there is any warrant of law for the issue of said certificates.

Second. Whether the issue of fifty million of bonds of the Panama Canal loan, bids for which were called for by the Secretary of the Treasury on November 18, 1907, was required to "defray the expenditures" on said canal, there being, at the time when both of these loans were made, upward of $200,000,000 in the Treasury for current expenditures.

Third. Whether there is any legislation necessary to protect the people and business interests of the country from the issue of unlawful money, if clearing-house certificates are such, and to prevent the illegal increase of the public debt in time of peace.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that the second resolution may now be read.

The Secretary read the second resolution submitted by Mr. TILLMAN on the 9th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to investigate and report to the Senate as soon as practicable—

First. Whether clearing-house certificates with which the country is now flooded have been issued under authority of law or contrary to the same.

Second. Whether the issuing of such certificates by an association of banks, both State and national, and the use of the same as money subjects such certificates or notes to the tax of 10 per cent provided in section 3412, United States Revised Statutes.

Third. Whether it would be permissible under the law as it is for an association of banks, warehouses, and elevators to issue certificates based on cotton, wheat, and tobacco stored in such warehouses and elevators and fully insured, to be used as money in marketing said crops in the same way as clearing-house certificates are now used.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I am not a member of the Committee on Finance, and I must confess that I have never studied finance very much as it is defined in the books, my labors along that line having been largely in the way of trying to meet my own obligations. I do not rise here to-day for the purpose of giving any light, but of seeking light from the "grave and reverend seigneurs" who have grown old in this body and in the service of the country upon the Committee on Finance. I am sorry that the distinguished chairman of the committee is absent, but there are others here of as great renown and equal ability who ought to be able to answer some of the inquiries I propose to make, if not immediately, then in the near future.

The Congress has assembled this year under peculiar conditions, extraordinary conditions, I may say, because while three months ago there were signs of a storm brewing and indications of financial disturbance, the masses of our people were never more prosperous. The railroads for a year or more—for two years, three years, had been offered more freight than they could transport, and we were told by the captains of industry who control our great railroad systems that the facilities in the way of engines and rolling stock were inadequate to handle the crops which the farmers of the country were producing and the products of our mines and our factories. Prices have been high, without any inflation of the currency; they have steadily risen, in fact; so that the cost of living has increased enormously. There was a universal demand for almost all the products of every factory in the land to enter into the marts of trade for consumption. Everything indicated that the claims of those in power that the Dingley tariff act, the protective system, to speak more generally, and the final adjustment and settlement of our financial affairs upon the gold basis, "sound money," had brought about a condition of happiness and peace, contentment and prosperity, which should make critics and fault-finders keep silent and all join in a chorus of applause and congratulation over the continuance in power of the party which had brought us all these blessings.

Suddenly a speculative corner in some copper stock, as it is charged, collapsed on Wall street, and immediately a cyclone, as it were, of distrust and of dread lest those who had deposited in this or that bank would be unable to get their own money, broke upon the land. Runs were made on the banks; several collapsed. One great trust company in New York City closed its doors in the face of its depositors who were demanding their money, and another one appeared on the point of toppling into the abyss when the aid of other trust companies and banks was enlisted; and for a time everything has appeared to settle down. There were bank failures in Brooklyn, a bank failure in Kansas City, one in San Francisco, I believe, another in Pittsburg, several little country banks went to the wall when their large city correspondents failed to respond to their pleas to send them their own money; and if we are not in the midst of a panic we are in the midst of a chill produced by the danger of a panic.

Amid all of this uneasiness and alarm we have been told from day to day by the newspapers (which have all united in a chorus of reassurance to the people that there was really no foundation for this trouble) that we would soon be at ourselves if only men would quit hoarding money and confidence should return. The Secretary of the Treasury made trips to New York on flying express trains; the Treasury was practically emptied into Wall street; and one of the greatest financiers of any age, Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, came over from New York to visit the President, and we have had utterances in the newspapers, editorial and otherwise, in praise of the great efforts and the magnificent philanthrophy and patriotism of this king of finance in aiding the country to get a grip on itself, and not everybody go crazy and precipitate further ills and horrors than had already seized us.

Presently we were informed that the Secretary of the Treasury, in addition to having placed practically all the ready money at his command under the control and for the assistance of banks in New York and elsewhere, but mostly in New York, felt constrained to increase the amount of ready cash in sight or available by issuing bonds—Panama loan bonds—and 3 per cent certificates of indebtedness. Calls were issued for bids on these two classes of our legal national debt—legal when properly issued—and we were assured by the papers from day to day that this action of the Secretary had created a condition of faith and belief in the recuperative powers already existing without any additional help. The bids were called for and sent in. But there was some strange delay in announcing who had succeeded in getting these Government securities.

A resolution has already been passed, coming from the Finance Committee last Thursday, calling on the Secretary for specific information along a given line. One of the resolutions which I have introduced bears upon a far more important question than the mere details of the issue—as to whether the Secretary of the Treasury has complied with the law and has given everybody a fair chance and whether the award of bonds has been in accordance with justice and fair play. I want somebody, either the Committee on Finance, which has some very able lawyers on it, or the Committee on the Judiciary, and I am not particular which—I want somebody somewhere in this Chamber with sufficient legal knowledge and knowledge of constitutional law to answer the inquiry which I propound as to whether the Secretary had any authority of law to issue these two classes of securities—the 3 per cent certificates of indebtedness and the Panama bonds.

There are to my mind some serious legal phases of this question which can not be pooh-poohed and ignored. There was a strange shrinkage in the amount, the Secretary first calling for bids upon $100,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness and then reducing it to $50,000,000, and I have seen so many varying statements in the papers as to the amounts that have been issued or would be issued that I myself am in doubt as to how many have been issued. Somebody can perhaps enlighten me. There was also a reduction in the amount of the Panama loan, I believe, as far as the actual amount put out is concerned, as compared with the amount for which bids were invited.

Whether or not the cloud of illegality, the usurpation of authority on the part of the Secretary which has been charged by the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency in the House, Mr. FOWLER, had something to do with causing the powers at the other end of the Avenue to halt, I do not know, but there is evidently abroad in the land a feeling that if the Secretary has not transcended his authority, if he has not ignored the plain letter of the law, he has certainly ignored its spirit; and I want light. I want some of the great lawyers in this body to present a defense of this action and explain just where the power rests and whether it has been exercised legally or not. I propose to read, in regard to the Panama bonds first, section 8 of the act approved June 28, 1902, which provides:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to borrow on the credit of the United States from time to time, as the proceeds may be required to defray expenditures authorized by this act (such proceeds when received to be used only for the purpose of meeting such expenditures)— the sum of $130,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and to prepare and issue therefor coupon or registered bonds of the United States, etc.

I will incorporate, with the consent of the Senate, the entire section, in order that it may go along with what I say as indicating the legal basis for the issuance of these securities, and to see whether those who read it will agree that there is any authority of law for it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The section referred to is as follows:

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to borrow on the credit of the United States from time to time, as the proceeds may be required to defray expenditures authorized by this act (such proceeds when received to be used only for the purpose of meeting such expenditures), the sum of one hundred and thirty million dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and to prepare and issue therefor coupon or registered bonds of the United States in such form as he may prescribe, and in denominations of twenty dollars or some multiple of that sum, redeemable in gold coin at the pleasure of the United States after ten years from the date of their issue, and payable thirty days from such date, and bearing interest payable quarterly in gold coin at the rate of two per centum per annum; and the bonds herein authorized shall be exempt from all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority: Provided, That said bonds may be disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury at not less than par, under such regulations as he may prescribe, giving to all citizens of the United States an equal opportunity to subscribe therefor, but no commissions shall be allowed or paid thereon; and a sum not exceeding one-tenth of one per centum of the amount of the bonds herein authorized is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the expense of preparing, advertising, and issuing the same.

Approved, June 28, 1902.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now for the law authorizing the issue of the 3 per cent certificates: I find in "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1898, that section 32 reads as follows:

SEC. 32. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to borrow from time to time, at a rate of interest not exceeding three per centum per annum, such sum or sums as, in his judgment, may be necessary to meet public expenditures, and to issue therefor certificates of indebtedness in such form as he may prescribe and in denominations of fifty dollars or some multiple of that sum; and each certificate so issued shall be payable, with the interest accrued thereon, at such time, not exceeding one year from the date of its issue, as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That the amount of such certificates outstanding shall at no time exceed one hundred millions of dollars; and the provisions of existing law respecting counterfeiting and other fraudulent practices are hereby extended to the bonds and certificates of indebtedness authorized by this act.

It will be seen, Mr. President, that in each of these authorizations to increase the public debt there are specific limitations. The Panama loan expressly provided that the bonds shall be issued "as the proceeds may be required to defray expenditures authorized by this act, such proceeds when received to be used only for the purpose of meeting such expenditures." In the matter of the 3 per cent certificates, they may be issued in "such sum or sums as, in his judgment, may be necessary to meet public expenditures." With these two limitations as a basis I simply ask the question, and I shall be glad to have light from any source, as to whether or not the Secretary of the Treasury has complied with the law. I contend that to issue these bonds and certificates, to obtain money to deposit with Wall street gamblers, or banks which lend to those gamblers, is an unlawful transaction, and it will strain the legal ability of any man on that side of this Chamber to make anything else out of it.

We have upward of $225,000,000 in the Treasury to-day not appropriated, and therefore subject to draft for the current expenditures. Is there any need for increasing the public debt at this time to build the Panama Canal or to meet current expenditures?

I recall (and no one was more bitter in denouncing it than myself) that along in 1893–94, when we were threatened with "dishonest" silver dollars, as some men have called them, the President of the United States under his oath of office and taking the responsibility felt willing and did issue bonds on top of bonds until, I think, the amount went up to $262,000,000. If I am not correct in the amount somebody will please set me straight. He issued this amount for the sole purpose of getting money with which to redeem in gold the greenbacks which were being thrust into the Treasury in an endless chain, going from Wall street to the Treasury and being deposited back in some other way provided by the schemers who were bent on forcing the gold standard on this country, by which the bonds kept going to New York, bearing interest, and the greenbacks kept coming here for redemption in gold, and the gold was obtained by selling interest-bearing securities.

I recall with what wrath and horror, apparently, our Republican brethren held up their hands and denounced the Democratic party for an increase of the public debt in time of peace by a Democratic President. Here we find in this year of grace 1907 that with no deficit in the Treasury, with ample funds to carry on our legitimate business, with no demand for a loan to build the Panama Canal, with absolutely no need for money to meet current expenditures, bonds are issued. There is this difference: President Cleveland did have a plain and explicit statute authorizing his action; President Roosevelt needs no statute.

To illustrate the concrete proposition best, some of these people in the country, cornfield lawyers, cornfield financiers, have a very shrewd way of getting at the meat of things, and one of my correspondents down in Georgia has summarized and epitomized the entire situation in a letter to me, as follows:

DUBLIN, GA., November 20, 1907.

Hon. BENJ. R. TILLMAN,

SIR: I take the liberty of asking you to tell the American people when Congress assembles why it is that the banks can issue noninterest bearing notes (clearing-house certificates) and force the people to take them in settlement of debts while when the Government issues notes it has to make them interest bearing in order to get the banks to accept the free use of them.

Respectfully,

J. B. CRESWELL.

It seems to me that if that inquiry is not passing through the minds of millions of Americans, North and South, Republicans and Democrats alike, the people are strangely ignorant and indifferent to their own welfare.

I do not propose to do more than to present the concrete proposition based on the law as it is written, which every man has read or is able to read, if he sees fit, and those who are sufficiently versed in law to interpret the English language when it is written into law will at least gratify me very much and I dare say millions of people of my kind—farmers—by answering the questions I have asked in the resolution, and the question which I have presented as boiled down by my correspondent, Mr. Creswell.

There are some phases of this bond issue, Mr. President, which remain to be presented. The inquiry instituted by the Finance Committee calls for most of the facts, and doubtless when the report comes in we shall hear from our Democratic members of the committee, and from Mr. CLAY and Mr. CULBERSON, who introduced the original resolutions. I simply want to call attention to some other phases that have been presented to me by some correspondents who would seem to charge unfairness, if not worse, on the issue of the Panama bonds.

But before I get to that phase of the subject, I wish to call attention to some other matters relating to the responsibility for the issue of these bonds. In order to get the record straight, I wish to have incorporated as a part of my remarks the Treasury circular of November 18, 1907, inviting proposals for Panama bonds. The section of the act I have already had inserted, and it is not worth while to put it in again, but simply the circular inviting bids as well as the circular inviting subscriptions for the 3 per cent certificates of indebtedness, both emanating from the Treasury of the United States, signed George B. Cortelyou.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, November 18, 1907.

The Secretary of the Treasury offers to the public $50,000,000 of the bonds of the Panama Canal loan authorized by section 8 of the act approved June 28, 1902, and supplemented by section 1 of the act of December 21, 1905. Both acts are quoted below.

The bonds will bear interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum; will be dated August 1, 1906, and the interest will be paid quarterly on the 1st days of November, February, May, and August. They will be issued in denominations of $20, $100, and $1,000 of coupon bonds, and of $20, $100, $1,000, and $10,000 of registered bonds. They will be redeemable in United States gold coin, at the pleasure of the United States, after ten years from the date of their issue, and will be payable thirty years from such date. They will be exempt from all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority. They will be available to national banks as security for circulating notes upon the same terms as the 2 per cent consols of 1930, to wit, the semiannual tax upon circulating notes, based upon the said bonds as security, will be one-fourth of 1 per cent. They will be receivable, like all other United States bonds, as security for public deposits in national banks.

The law forbids their sale at less than par and provides that all citizens of the United States shall have equal opportunity to subscribe therefor.

In pursuance of the above announcement the Secretary invites bids for the bonds heretofore described, which must be submitted to this Department on or before the 30th of November, 1907. Each bid should state the amount of bonds desired by the subscriber, whether coupon or registered, the price he is willing to pay, and the place where he desires to make payment—whether at the Treasury of the United States or at the office of some one of the assistant treasurers at New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, New Orleans, or San Francisco. All bids should be addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, Division of Loans and Currency, and the envelopes inclosing them should be plainly marked, "Bids for Panama Canal bonds."

Upon the receipt and classification of the bids hereby invited, the successful bidders will be advised of the acceptance of their bids, and they will be instructed as to the date upon which payment is desired to be made at the Treasury or some subtreasury of the United States.

In considering bids, the bidders offering the highest prices will receive the first allotment. Of two or more bidders offering the same price, those asking for the smaller amounts of bonds will receive priority in allotment. The Department reserves the right to permit bidders offering the highest prices to increase the amount of their purchases.

For the sake of uniformity the bonds will be dated August 1, 1906, which is the date of the outstanding Panama Canal bonds, but interest on the bonds of this issue will begin November 1, 1907, and bidders will be required to pay accrued interest on their bonds from that date to the date of payment.

The Department also reserves the right to reject any or all bids, if deemed to be to the interests of the United States so to do.

The bonds will be ready for delivery upon receipt of payment therefor.

Prospective bidders desiring information not contained in this circular may address the Secretary of the Treasury, division of loans and currency, Washington, D. C., the assistant treasurers at Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans, or San Francisco.

GEORGE B. CORTELYOU, Secretary.

Mr. TILLMAN. The day before these circulars were issued the newspapers published, and I suppose, of course, it is authentic, the following letter from the President to the Secretary of the Treasury:

THE WHITE HOUSE,

MY DEAR MR. CORTELYOU: I have considered your proposal. I approve the issue of the $50,000,000 of Panama bonds, which will be immediately available as the basis for additional currency. I also approve the issue of $100,000,000, or so much as you may find necessary, of $50, 3 per cent interest-bearing Government notes, the proceeds of the sale of which can be at once deposited by you where the greatest need exists, and especially in the West and South, where the crops have to be moved. I have assurance that the leaders of Congress are considering a currency bill which will meet in permanent fashion the needs of the situation and which I believe will be passed at an early date after Congress convenes two weeks hence.

What is most needed just at present is that our citizens should realize how fundamentally sound business conditions in this country are and how absurd it is to permit themselves to get into a panic and create a stringency by hoarding their savings instead of trusting perfectly sound banks. There is no particle of risk involved in letting business take its natural course, and the people can help themselves and the country most by putting back into active circulation the money they are hoarding. The banks and trust companies are solvent.

There is more currency in the country to-day than there was a month ago, when the supply was ample; $55,000,000 in gold has been imported and the Government has deposited another $60,000,000. These are facts, and I appeal to the public to cooperate with us in restoring normal business conditions.

The Government will see that the people do not suffer, if only the people themselves will act in a normal way. Crops are good and business conditions are sound, and we should put the money we have into circulation in order to meet the needs of our abounding prosperity.

There is no analogy at all with the way things were in 1893. On November 30 of that year there was in the Treasury but $161,000,000 in gold. On November 14 of this year there was in the Treasury $904,000,000 in gold. Ten years ago the circulation per capita was $23.23. It is now $33.23. The steps that you now take, the ability of the Government to back them up, and the fact that not a particle of risk is involved therein give the fullest guarantees of the sound condition of our people and the sound condition of our Treasury. All that our people have to do now is to go ahead with their normal business in a normal fashion and the whole difficulty disappears, and this end will be achieved at once if each man will act as he normally does act and as the real conditions of the country's business fully warrants his now acting.

Sincerely, yours, THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Hon. GEORGE B. CORTELYOU,
Secretary of the Treasury.

In this connection, Mr. President, I know that the New York Sun of recent months has been very vindictive and bitter in its denunciation of the President—vitriolic in fact. As I recall an editorial a couple of weeks ago it was almost equal to Junius, certainly in its English. But whether the Sun can be relied on to be fair and decent in its treatment of a public man whom it does not like is not the question. The Sun can always be relied on, as I believe, to give the facts as it finds them or believes them to be true. In other words, it is a good newspaper, and I read it for its news rather than its editorials, because many of the editorials are so infernally lop-sided and partisan and Republican that I have not been able to stomach them at all. But I give it credit for almost the best English I read.

I find in the Sun of last Saturday a telegram dated December 13, which tells us about an interview at the White House. The head lines read as follows:

PRESIDENT SHOULDERS PANIC—RATHER GLAD TO TAKE THE RESPONSIBILITY FOR IT—TELLS VISITORS THAT IT EXPOSED "THE ROTTEN FOUNDATIONS ON WHICH THE FINANCES OF THE COUNTRY ARE BUILT," AND SINCE IT WAS NECESSARY HE IS GLAD IT CAME.

I will not read the entire dispatch which I have clipped, but only the final portion of it. It relates to a visit to the White House of one of the President's cowboy admirers, Mr. Dahlman, I believe, mayor or ex-mayor of Omaha, who had a special entree when he applied for admission, although it was Cabinet morning, and who came out and recited what he had heard from the President, and afterwards, when it was written out and submitted to him in cold print, he said, "That is what he said." Now, of course I realize that Mr. Dahlman is in imminent danger of joining the Ananias club, but whether he does or whether he does not, I give for what it is worth this clipping from the Sun, describing what the President is purported to have said. Perhaps somebody will use the telephone to find out, if he thinks it is worth while.

"Of course the boys out in Omaha will want to know whether or not I saw you and talked with you," said Mr. Dahlman, "and I thought I would drop around."

The President's reply was quoted by Mr. Dahlman to a reporter after coming from the White House, and later in the day the Omaha mayor verified the following written statement of what Mr. Roosevelt had said:

"I'm glad you came. Mighty glad you came. Tell the boys out in Omaha that if I am responsible for this money panic, which showed up the rotten foundations on which the finances of the country are built, I am glad of it. I don't care what governors and judges say, this panic had to come sooner or later. If I have been instrumental in bringing it about sooner than it would have come naturally, it is all the better. The panic showed the necessity for a general house cleaning in financial circles, and the sooner house cleaning is started the sooner it is over with."

So we get Roosevelt in parallel columns, Roosevelt versus Roosevelt, one in his official letter to Mr. Cortelyou and the other in a purported interview.

Of course, Mr. President, the responsibility for the conditions which confront us is a very important thing for us to consider; almost as important as to how we shall find a remedy or relief for this sick man. The Treasury of the United States is not sick. It is the fellow in Wall street who is out of fix. I do not hesitate to say if it were not for the intimate association and connection and domination of Wall street with the Treasury of the United States and its administration we need not worry ourselves about this so much. But there are so many facts bearing on this case which go to show that the control of Wall street in our financial affairs in this Chamber and at the other end of the Capitol and also at the other end of the Avenue—certainly in the Treasury Department—is paramount, that the location of the responsible man, "the man who struck Billy Patterson," so to speak, who struck the American farmer, the American cotton grower, and the American miner, and the American manufacturer, and who has brought upon us this paralyzing, chilly condition, it will be easy to find out who he is.

I was out in the West, away down in Texas, at Bonham, when the first wind, the slightest breeze, of financial trouble reached that section, when the flurry first came on in New York, and the run on the Knickerbocker Trust Company produced its suspension and others threatened suspension. We were told by the newspapers of the West where I was, and the only ones I saw, that the West was rolling in wealth, that it had sold its crops during the last eight or nine years at higher prices than in the history of farming, and that the banks were bursting open. I had a savings-bank president out in Iowa tell me that unless he could do something with money he would have to refuse to accept it on deposit, that he could not pay any interest at all, not even 2 per cent; and every man familiar with conditions in the South must know that they are more prosperous to-day than they have been in half a century.

I was in Texas, and I had read in the papers that it would all be over in a little while; that we in the South and West were all right anyhow; that Wall street was stewing in its own grease; the gamblers were threatened and worried over their speculative loans; "we were not concerned; we are all right."

But presently the mails brought notice that all the banks in the West and South which had deposits at the reserve cities or in New York need not call for them, because they could not get them; that New York was in desperate straits, gasping, almost on the verge of despair, for more currency. Greenbacks went to 3 and 4 per cent premium, being sold on the street $100 in greenbacks for $103 and $104 in bankable paper which could be deposited. We have heard of a premium on gold, we learned all about it way back yonder, just after the war, until we had the resumption of specie payments; but it is the first time in the history of finances in this country, as far as I am aware, that greenbacks and national-bank notes were at a premium and that people were gasping for breath, almost on the verge of despair, asking and pleading for currency, which was necessary in their affairs, money being the blood of trade, the blood of commerce.

The President tells us that all we need to do is to have confidence and pursue our normal course. I read at Bonham, Tex., in the paper there, the account of his speech at Nashville, where he reiterated what he had said in his message a year ago, that as far as being responsible for the panic he was innocent of it; the only thing he had done was to "turn on the light;" that he was responsible for that, but he was "not responsible for what the light disclosed."

As I said, I think Mr. Dahlman will join the Ananias brigade, but whether the President is proud of his association with this great business-disaster or not, whether he ever said any such thing or thought any such thing, we are face to face with conditions here, not theories, and the facts can not be pooh-poohed and pushed aside like Mr. Dahlman's statement may be. I clipped from the Washington Post yesterday the following:

EXPOSE UNSOUND BANKS—LONDON ECONOMIST ASKS IF AMERICA DARE DO THAT—COMPLAINS OF INCONVERTIBLE NATURE OF CURRENCY AND OF GOVERNMENT BOND BASIS FOR BANK NOTES.

LONDON, December 14.

America's financial difficulties continue to be the dominant topic in the business world throughout Europe. It is not surprising that the comments on this side show a tendency to exasperation, inasmuch as the European sufferers regarded themselves as innocent victims. A representative utterance is this in to-day's Economist:

"How and when the American coach will be pulled out of the mire in which it has been sticking for the last eight weeks is a problem that becomes more pressing every day. The present situation is a peril to financial and commercial interests all the world over. The best that can be said is that the realities are beginning to be appreciated on the other side of the Atlantic.

"The only way, apparently, to eliminate the distrust that has been directed against all banks is to divert the suspicion to those which deserve it, a disagreeable remedy indeed, but for such diseases the cure can not be pleasant. Better far the suspension of the few, than the semi-suspension of all. But will the rulers of the United States have the courage to insist upon this surgical operation, and will they conduct their examination without fear or favor?

"A great part of the American currency is inconvertible. The issues of bank notes in the United States are not based upon sound principles. The so-called security of bond deposits is no proper security at all. It is a device which originated in a desire to give an artificially high value to the Government's debt and enable it to borrow cheaply. The American people are saddled with an unsound currency, because the American Government, when it was hard up, wanted to make a market for its bonds."

Now, Mr. President, we have been told that in the last year or two—I do not remember the exact limits of time in which this shrinkage has come about—the losses in Wall Street, or in all of those marts where bonds and stocks are bought and sold, as marked by the shrinkage in value of such stocks and bonds, has amounted to over $3,000,000,000. Who lost all this money? Had not these very same stocks and bonds been sold to innocent purchasers—that is, the investing public—at gilt-edged prices during the period of inflation which has been blown into a balloon by the speculative barons in Wall street? Who aided in this blowing up of financial balloons to float off in the gaze of the unsuspecting widow or small shopkeeper or shopgirl or laborer who had saved a few dollars and wanted to invest at a reasonable interest? Who helped to float these hot-air balloons, so to speak?

I said a little while ago, and I believe statistics will prove it, that whenever there has been any stringency whatever in Wall street in regard to currency and the banks found themselves tied up, hard up, as the phrase might be, all they had to do was to telephone or whisper into the Treasury at Washington, "Send us 10 or 20 or 30 or 40 million dollars or some other sum of money, we are awfully tight to-day." And at once the machinery was set in motion to transfer from the Treasury of the United States, or the subtreasury, money paid into them by taxation to support the Government here and to carry on our proper governmental affairs, to be paid over to aid and abet and help these gamblers in putting up prices or putting them down, as the case might be, so that they could unload on any innocent purchaser whenever any "lamb" came in. While the purpose was, as it has been worked out, to seesaw and work the thing down, down, down, and finally create a condition of distrust, which would produce widespread, almost universal fear for the safety of the money which was deposited in the banks, and bring about a collapse which would enable the gamblers to reach out and recoup themselves. And those fellows who had the prudence on their own terms to get hold of every dollar and hold it and use it to buy in the bonds which were sold at such immensely inflated values at one half or less, or a little more, as the case might be, than they had been sold for—these are the men who are to blame for the panic, and the Treasury of the United States has been in collusion with them.

So we find that when the banks reached a point, with their $13,000,000,000 of deposits, taking the country at large—national banks, savings banks, and State banks, as shown by the report of the Comptroller of the Currency; $13,000,000,000 deposited by our hard-working industrious people—when men began to get uneasy and went to those banks and said "We want our money," they were told "Well, you may have $10 to-day." That was the first thing that startled the South and West. When I went across Oklahoma from Texas—for I came from Texas into Oklahoma—just following the proclamation of the governor giving five days' holiday in order that the banks could not be compelled to pay out money during those five days, they were stretching out despairing hands toward St. Louis and other reserve cities, and saying "Send us our money; our depositors want it and we want to pay it to them;" but New York gripped her money still tighter and said, "You can not get a cent from us; we are in the water ourselves up to our necks and struggling, and you can not get your own money even." Chicago and St. Louis echoed the cry and everyone was told "We can not pay you more than $25 no matter how much you have deposited." And the President says he is proud of it—at least Mr. Dahlman says the President says he is proud of it. I can not believe the President ever said any such thing. The President has been guilty of many indiscretions, and has said many things which perhaps in his cooler moments he would be willing to take out of print, but I can not believe he is so callous-hearted as to feel any satisfaction whatsoever, whether he admitted it or not, in the condition of paralysis which confronts this country. I do not believe it. I give him more credit for doing what he has done in the belief that he was doing it for the interest of the people of this country. I can not give him credit for some things that he has not done.

That brings me back to a discussion for a moment, briefly, to the question raised by this London paper, as to what we need here. This authority across the water, this financial journal says the American people ought to investigate their banks, find out those who have broken the law, punish them, and relieve the others of the suspicion which is now upon them, so as to demonstrate that the whole system is not corrupt and rotten.

When we recall the shiver of disgust and distrust which began to seize upon the minds and hearts of men when disclosures in regard to the insurance companies were made public, when we come on down and see later the charges—I do not know whether they have been proven or not, but they have been published and I have read them in the newspapers—that William C. Whitney, Thomas F. Ryan, and three or four leading financiers and multimillionaires had stolen, so to speak, one hundred or two hundred thousand dollars of trust funds of some concerns which they had in charge—looking on down through the long list of rascally transactions which have been disclosed, on which the people have looked and wondered if we had no law, if there were no officers in power whose duty it was to investigate and see that these people were brought to justice and to see that they did not squander and steal the money of their depositors—is it any wonder that there was distrust and panic when the banks in the South and in the West notified their depositors, "We can not pay you any money because we can not get it; we have got to hold what little we have in hand, but we will let you have $5 or $10 or $25 a day," which I think was the limit at two or three of the places where I went, and it was the most difficult thing in the world to get any cash at all?

We are told every three or four days—in fact, almost daily—that conditions are getting better; that relief is in sight; that the issue of bonds and the 3 per cent certificates, showing the purpose of the Government to stand behind the banks has had the effect of restoring confidence, and so on. But if you stop and think for a minute how in all this vast area of country to the West and the South the people will feel about the financial situation when they look at New York and see the tremor, the terror, which pulsates there as soon as New York undertakes to liquidate the claims of any banks which have deposited money there and allow the banks South and West to resume, we will say, currency payments—if we do not have the spectacle of men scrambling at those bank doors to get hold of their own deposits in cash it will be a blessing; whereas this condition would not have existed if it had not been necessary for Wall street to notify those banks, "We can not pay you what is due you, and do not ask us, because we will not send currency." As Senator DAVIS remarked the other day, some man called for money which was due him, and he was told cold-bloodedly by his correspondent in the New York bank, where his money was deposited, "I will go and buy it for you." So if we can get around the catastrophe whenever resumption is attempted we shall call ourselves blessed.

But in the meantime what has taken place? How is the country moving on? What has happened? Here is what has happened. Two friends, one a Member of Congress and the other an unknown friend down in Asheville, N. C., hearing of my desire to get hold of some specimens of the kind of currency we are now having in the South and West, sent me two clearing-house certificates. One is from Hon. CHARLES H. WEISSE and is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., December 13, 1907.

Hon. BENJAMIN TILLMAN,
Senate Chamber.

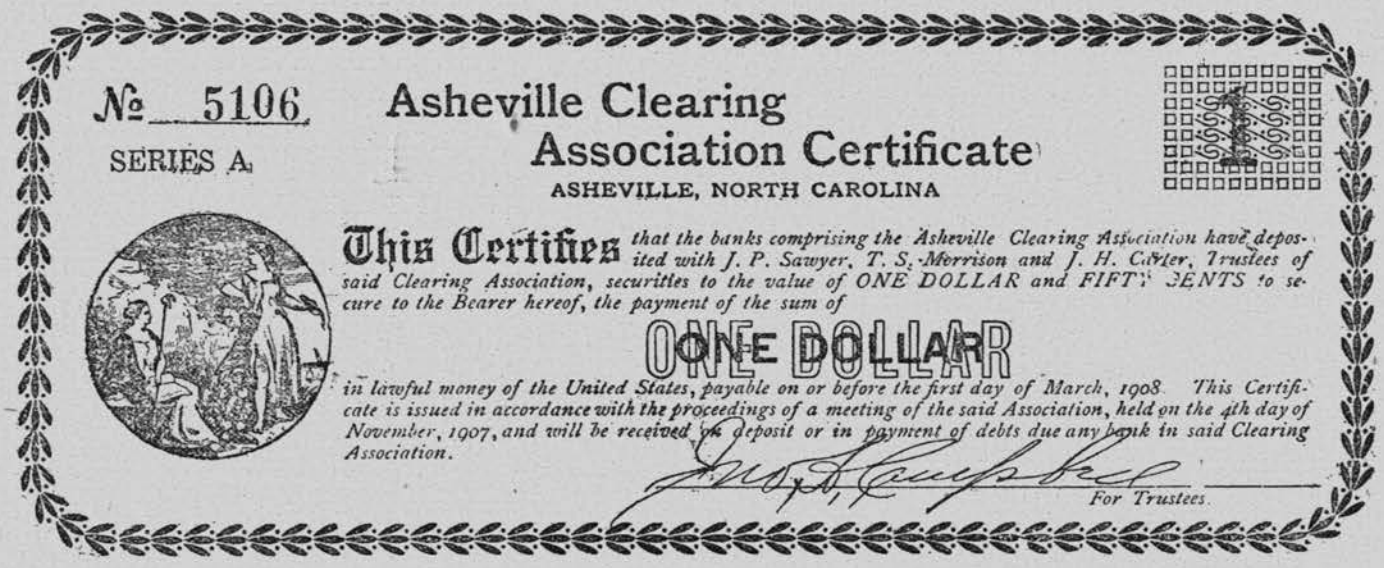
MY DEAR SIR: Inclosed please find a clearing-house certificate, circulating in Milwaukee as money. They will loan these to you and pay you 6 to 10 per cent interest—

I suppose he means charge 6 to 10 per cent—

They are using them out there entirely, there being but little money circulated.



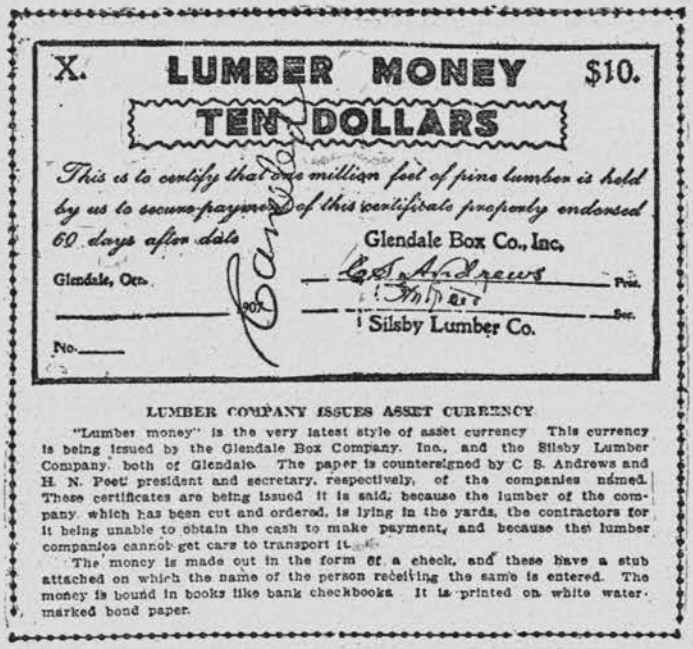
Yours, respectfully, CHAS. H. WEISSE.

Here is a fine looking specimen. [Exhibiting.] It looks like what you people would call Confederate money, with which I was very familiar when I was a boy—a shinplaster—and yet they are issued by the national banks. When there are some of us who would prefer to have Uncle Sam's money, with the legal-tender quality on it, payable for debts or receivable for taxes, I suppose we will be howled down as wanting fiat currency. But as between this [exhibiting]—look at it! I am going to have it engraved in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD if they can do it without destroying it, because it costs a dollar, and I do not propose to lose a dollar for enlightening you people on that side. [Laughter.] But I will read it:

There are no familiar greenbacks out there. Not even their own greenbacks deposited in the Chicago or New York banks can be used to carry on their own local affairs, because the stock gamblers in Wall street have chucked a nail in the automobile and the thing will not go around any more.

Here is another specimen [exhibiting]: This time it is yellow instead of gray; it is not a gold certificate either.

At the same time the wholesale merchants who are corresponding and sending out notices of what they have to sell, about orders for goods, and all that sort of thing, have sent out requests that remittances be sent them by cash, by registered mail, by post-office money order, express money order, or New York or Chicago exchange.



I have here a letter transmitting a specimen of "lumber money." The letter and the specimen are as follows:

14 LAFAYETTE BUILDING,
Portland, Oreg., December 11, 1907.

Hon. BENJAMIN R. TILLMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I think we can go you one better on asset currency. The inclosed was clipped from the Morning Oregonian, Portland, Oreg., of December 11, 1907.

Very respectfully, JOHN B. MOON.

LUMBER COMPANY ISSUES ASSET CURRENCY

"Lumber money" is the very latest style of asset currency. This currency is being issued by the Glendale Box Company, Inc., and the Silsby Lumber Company, both of Glendale. The paper is countersigned by C. S. Andrews and H. N. Peet, president and secretary, respectively, of the companies named. These certificates are being issued, it is said, because the lumber of the company which has been cut and ordered, is lying in the yards, the contractors for it being unable to obtain the cash to make payment, and because the lumber companies cannot get cars to transport it.

The money is made out in the form of a check, and these have a stub attached on which the name of the person receiving the same is entered. The money is bound in books like bank checkbooks. It is printed on white water-marked bond paper.

Local currency! I find some people who are very anxious to get local currency. There are a large number of people in the South, and I suppose some few elsewhere, who would like to have a repeal of the 10 per cent tax on State banks, so that they could have a currency that would not fly far away from home. I do not want it. Greenbacks are good enough for me, because I have become habituated to taking a dollar that is printed in green. When I get it in Texas I can spend it in Maine, and nobody ever questions its validity and its worth as a dollar. Having become accustomed to that, I think the American people will be a long time getting ready to consent to have this asset currency, for which some people are clamoring, or to put up very long with this kind of stuff [exhibiting]—these shin plasters; but we must have something with which to do business.

Money is the blood of trade and commerce, and to take it away is like taking all the blood out of your body and not having any circulating and carrying life and vitality through it. You will become lame, you will become stiff, and you will go to the graveyard unless you get some blood in you; and when people have loaned their honest money, who have got collateral that is worth three or five times the amount which the banks have been accustomed to taking in the shape of cotton or wheat, and want something to do business with, the local bank says, "I can not help you except in this way." This is done by every little bobtailed clearing-house association with three banks, and I suppose, in some places, with but two. I do not know how far up this way the conditions are the same, but that is the case all over the South and largely over the West, and in the big cities, as we see in the case of Milwaukee.

I had somewhere a statement taken from the Wall Street Journal, giving the amount of clearing-house certificates that have been issued by the various banking associations up to a certain date, which I will ask permission to incorporate as a part of my remarks. I made an effort to get the figures from New York. I have the figures for the national banks, because they were called for by the Comptroller of the Currency, but the State banks—some twenty-two of them, I think—that belong to the New York clearing house have not been called on by the State bank examiner or superintendent, so there are no facts at my hand to enable me to give the exact financial status in regard to all clearing-house certificates.

The statement referred to is as follows:

CLEARING-HOUSE CERTIFICATES REPORTED BY NATIONAL BANKS.

Only net balances shown as assets or liabilities, making total of over thirty millions.

Resources and liabilities do not balance, because of absence of reports by State banks. Estimating that State banks issue half as many certificates as national banks, the total on December 3 may have been fifty millions.

The Comptroller of the Currency instructed national banks to report for publication only net balances of clearing-house certificates issued and received by them under "resources" or "liabilities," but to report for his information the total amount of certificates taken out by each.

The national banks of New York City report net balances of clearing-house certificates on December 3, 1907, as follows:

| | Assets. | Liabilities. |
|---|---|---|
| New York | | $495,000 |
| Merchants | $2,285,000 | |
| Mechanics | 1,170,000 | |
| Phenix | 710,000 | |
| City | | 7,015,500 |
| Chemical | 4,925,000 | |
| Merchants' Exchange | 25,000 | |
| Gallatin | 1,090,000 | |
| Butchers and Drovers | 85,000 | |
| American Exchange | 3,580,000 | |
| Commerce | 5,490,000 | |
| Mercantile | | 1,360,000 |
| Chatham | 280,000 | |
| North America | | 2,429,100 |
| Hanover | 6,100,000 | |
| Citizens' Central | 400,000 | |
| Market and Fulton | | 115,000 |
| Importers and Traders | 2,255,000 | |
| Park | | 6,570,000 |
| East River | 300,000 | |
| Fourth | | 960,000 |
| Second | 2,300,000 | |
| First | | 1,515,000 |
| Irving National Exchange | 300,000 | |
| New York County | | 450,000 |
| Chase | | 8,379,000 |
| Lincoln | 915,000 | |
| Garfield | 490,000 | |
| Fifth | 390,000 | |
| Seaboard | 650,000 | |
| Liberty | | 335,000 |
| New Amsterdam | | 1,035,000 |
| Total | 33,750,000 | 30,649,600 |

The resources and liabilities ought to balance, and probably would, if the State banks, members of the clearing house, should make a report as of the same day and in the same manner.

It is impossible to make any estimate of the amount of certificates issued, but if the State banks should report as of December 3, the total resources, or of liabilities, would indicate the amount of certificates then outstanding.

There are twenty State banks and thirty-two national banks in the clearing house, and if the State banks had half as many certificates outstanding as the national banks the total on December 3 must have been between $45,000,000 and $50,000,000.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have taken the trouble to examine into the matter of clearing-house certificates. I find there are two kinds of clearing-house certificates: First, clearing-house certificates based on coin, which are used by the banks solely in the adjustment and settlement of their balances every night. Instead of carrying around currency or gold coin in bags, going to every bank and collecting all that is due, all the banks meet, through their accredited representatives—their financial clerks—with all the obligations of the various banks of the city, which they hold at the clearing house, and they simply sit down and add up the indebtedness of any one bank to the others and see if there is any balance due. Then the debtor bank must pay coin or currency, or if it is hard up and the other banks will trust it, they issue a certificate. The certificates are issued in large amounts, but they never circulate outside of the clearing house, and are kept there simply as checks, so to speak, between the banks which are willing to trust each other. They are of great benefit to business as well as to the safety of business.

But there is another type of clearing-house certificates, called clearing-house loan certificates, which are issued by the banks of a given association with a view to aiding one another when there is a weak brother in the family or in the clearing house and the others know it has an immense amount of securities piled up somewhere, which are nonconvertible at the time, but which are good. In such cases they will loan their credit to the weaker banks, charging so much interest—from 7 to 9 per cent, I believe, is the usual amount—which necessitates the banks redeeming clearing-house certificates which the clearing house has issued to them just as soon as possible, because they can not afford to be paying this interest. The banks can not get that interest ordinarily; but when the rate of interest goes to 20, 30, or 40 per cent, as it has on call in New York in the last sixty days, up and down according to the exigencies and necessities of the day—when the speculators get dragged to the brink of the precipice and their creditors say to them "Pay, or over you go," they pay any price almost, wanting a suspension of sentence and a few more hours in which to live and breathe, hoping some lucky turn may enable them to recover and get out of deep water before they drown.

You have these two types. Now, there is a third type, such as I have just read about—the Nashville certificate. I have here samples in a book entitled "Clearing Houses," by James G. Cannon. I do not want to tire the Senate by reading on this subject, but, with the consent of the Senate, I will incorporate such portions of it as will illustrate the straits to which the country banks have been put in the past—in 1893, for instance—and which will show the present condition in a very large area of our country, where, as I said a little while ago, all the circulating medium has disappeared and every man who has a dollar is holding on to it as though his life depended on keeping it, and the very banks which have large funds in greenbacks or national-bank notes or gold are issuing clearing-house certificates—these shinplasters—because they do not know whether the storm is over or not. They have got to wait to see the skies clear up and get past that point when New York notifies her country customers, "We are ready to pay you what we owe; we are ready to resume currency payments and enable you to pay on the demands of your depositors." When are you going to resume currency payments and give me my money, or allow me to check on it, as I have been in the habit of doing?

Form of Clearing-house Loan Certificate used in Birmingham, Ala.

Have I permission, Mr. President, to incorporate such portions of these examples or exhibits in the book to which I have referred to, together with the text, which will illustrate my own somewhat muddy statement in regard to clearing-house certificates and the uses to which they have been put?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

In June, 1893, the Clearing-House Association at Birmingham, Ala., appointed a committee to inquire into the best methods for relieving the situation, which was aggravated by a run on one of its members about a month previous to that time, and the committee recommended the use of clearing-house loan certificates. In addition to this the association passed resolutions similar to the one passed at New Orleans, limiting the amount of actual cash each member should pay to a customer on any one day to $100, which was afterwards reduced to $50, and providing a penalty for violation. The denominations of loan certificates first used were $1,000, $500, $100, $50, $10, and $5, respectively.

Like the certificates in Atlanta, they were intended for general circulation among the customers of the banks, but, unlike any certificates previously mentioned, they were issued to the extent of only 50 per cent of the collateral required. Customers at first received them with much reluctance, but they soon found that the merchants would take them for debts and for merchandise, that the banks would take them on deposit and accept them in payment of notes. To obtain cash persons commenced to buy small bills of goods with them, expecting to receive money in change. This checkmated the merchants and they called on the association for smaller denominations. Hence certificates of $2, $1, 50 cents, and 25 cents were subsequently issued. No other association in the United States compares with the one at Birmingham in the comprehensiveness of its currency system and in the extent to which it was projected on this occasion. A facsimile of one of the smaller certificates is presented among the illustrations.

The clearing-house association at Chattanooga, Tenn., resorted to loan certificates in 1893, the only time in the history of that organization that it has done so.

Besides the loan certificates issued in 1893, there was a considerable amount of emergency circulation taken out by the banks in the Southeast, under the title of "clearing-house certificates," in cities where no clearing houses existed. In adopting the name of clearing-house certificates, it was not the purpose of the banks to practice deception on the people, but to indicate what was really true and what the term would seem to imply, namely, that such certificates were temporary loans made by the banks associated together, and that the banks were pledged for their redemption. The denominations in the cities referred to were: Albany, Ga., $10, $5, and $1; Chester, S. C., $10, $5, and $1; Columbia, S. C., $50, $20, $10, $5, $2, and $1; Danville, Va., $100, $50, $20, $10, $5, $2, and $1; Newnan, Ga., $10, $5, and $1, and Rockhill, S. C., $5, $2, and $1. There is no doubt that the relief afforded in this manner was of great public assistance in the several communities where it was given, effecting results similar to those accomplished by the actual clearing-house loan certificates in the great centers.

Mr. TILLMAN. All I have got to say is, that beyond any question there have been immense sums of these clearing-house shinplasters issued. The statement from New York showed the amount to be thirty-odd million dollars. How much circulated as cash and currency I do not know; perhaps none of it; but in the South and West it is about all the currency we have and our people do not like it. They have got cotton worth $55 a bale, 12,000,000 bales of it, so the Agricultural Department tells us, deducting what has already been sold. Cotton has always been as good as gold, any time, anywhere. This year you can not even get greenbacks on it. Why? Because the greenbacks are not there. The banks have loaned to them what money they had and the planters have been in the habit of borrowing what they needed to move the crops, but now they can not get any money.

There are those who believe this panic was manufactured to reduce the price of cotton and enable the speculators of Wall street, who have been selling futures, to get cotton to deliver at low prices. The farmers in the West are in the same position. They have got their grain stored up in their barns and elevators and they want to sell it, but they can not get any money to handle it. They have got to take shinplasters or nothing. As these shinplasters do not fly far from home and are not receivable on deposit in the central cities, the people do not feel willing to accept them, and they are looking to Congress to give them some relief. What shall it be? That is for the Finance Committee, not for me, to say. I have my choice between "fiat money" issued by the United States and this kind of stuff or asset currency based on stocks and bonds which have been watered beyond the limit. To give you an illustration of how it has been done, I know of one railroad passing through my State that was built at $20,000 a mile. It is worth no more than $20,000 a mile, and could be rebuilt for that amount, but stocks and bonds have been issued to an amount something like $100,000 a mile. Who got them? New York speculators or buccaneers or pirates, or whatever you call them, bought up the road and exploited it, issued stocks and bonds—water, water, water—and their millions in private fortunes multiply while our facilities of transportation and travel and handling freight dwindle, dwindle, dwindle.

What were these stocks and bonds issued for? Partly to increase the facilities of the railroads and to enable the railroads to handle their business. They have had more business in the last seven years than they ever had in the history of commerce. There has been no change in rates, except in the last twelve months, when the State legislatures began to act in the matter of mileage for passengers. The profit of the railroads has been immense. Where has it gone? In betterments? Some little, perhaps, but I am compelled to say, from what I have seen in traveling around, that the bulk of these stocks and bonds that have been issued in watering railroad properties, instead of going into the honest betterment and improvement of the roads, have gone into the pockets of men in Wall street, these captains of industry who whisper over the telephone to Cortelyou, "Deposit Government money with us or we will drown"—"Help me, Cassius, or I sink." And yet we sit here and do nothing—we have just begun to sit, but we were here last year and we did nothing—no, we passed the bill of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], which provided that the Secretary of the Treasury might deposit with those national banks designated as national depositories the internal-revenue receipts, by requiring them to give satisfactory security by the deposit of United States bonds and otherwise. We were informed that that would give some relief and easement to the conditions in New York, which were becoming threatening then—tight and unpleasant. They wanted some relief. I do not know how it is with the rest of you, but my mail brings me every day from North, South, East, and West this man's, that man's, and the other man's scheme for currency reform. I can not read them all. I hardly read the envelopes. After I open one end and see it is from some one who thinks he knows all about finance I put it aside, for I am not on the Finance Committee and would have no influence if I were, and am not supposed to know anything about finance, but I know what old John Randolph said over there in the House when, discussing a financial measure once—away back in the days of the panic of 1837, I believe it was—in that thin, squeaky voice of his, which along with his vitriolic utterances and the brilliancy of his mind made him famous, he rose up and said: "Mr. Speaker, I have discovered the philosopher's stone. It consists of four words: 'Pay as you go.'" Now, these fellows in New York do not pay as they go. They want us always to pay as we go, but they will not pay as they go.

Mr. President, there is another phase of this bond issue which I desire to present briefly without trespassing too much on the time of the Senate. I have here a letter written by a gentleman over his own signature, which I will read for what it is worth, so that the Committee on Finance can investigate it if it sees fit. The writer states that he bid for Panama bonds at a higher price than they were sold for. He says he offered 103½ for fifty thousand dollars' worth, and he got nothing, while the statement which was given out in the papers three or four days ago was to the effect that nobody got a bond except the national banks, some of them getting bonds as low as 102.125, as shown by the following list of successful bidders for sums of $100,000 or upward:

I will now read the letter of Mr. Schramm:

My morning paper tells me that Secretary Cortelyou has awarded all the new issue of Panama bonds to national banks only. The law governing the sale of these bonds says that "all citizens shall have an equal opportunity to subscribe for them."

I entered a bid for $50,000 of these bonds at 103½ and am ready to take them and pay the cash for them at this price. Many of the allotments to national banks were at prices more than 1 per cent below my bid. In other words, the action of the Secretary of the Treasury deprives the Government of $500, on my bid alone. I dare say there are others like it. The total loss to the United States Treasury must run into the thousands, by reason of favoritism to national banks. This is not only unfair—it is unlawful. By what authority can Secretary Cortelyou sell bonds to the lowest bidders?

J. F. SCHRAMM.

What were the losses to the Government resulting from this transaction, supposing these charges are true? The Senate has called for an abstract of all the bids, and we will get it some time or other, after the holidays, I reckon. We will then see whether or not these accusations against the fairness of the bond sale have any basis. I do not want to condemn anybody unheard; I do not jump at the conclusion that anybody is guilty. I am merely trying to marshal the facts as I have them, to enable those who may be charged with the investigation, when it shall come, if we get it, to reach the bottom if they see fit.

I have here a letter from a man in this city, in which he gives an outline of his bid and the loss to the Treasury by reason of its nonacceptance, showing the processes by which the banks get the bonds bearing 2 per cent, and have 90 per cent of the proceeds paid the Treasury for the bonds, immediately returned to the bank as a Government deposit. In other words, 90 per cent of the money obtained for the securities was deposited with the bank to be loaned, the bank drawing 2 per cent on the bonds and loaning the currency which was deposited by the Government for whatever it could get. So it goes. That is the favoritism which is charged, and which some people believe exists, in regard to the financial status; that those in control of our finances have not held the scale evenly or obeyed the law themselves, and have no regard for the rights and interests of the common people. I will print the letter under the permission already received.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

Hon. BENJ. R. TILLMAN,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: The circular inviting proposals for canal bonds issued November 19, 1907, sets forth "that all citizens of the United States shall have equal opportunity to subscribe therefor;" yet in the printed list of allotments the entire issue was divided up among the national banks of the country, and if any private citizen was allotted a small share of said bonds his name does not appear in the list. Although the "bids" were opened on November 30, 1907, the list of allotments was not made public until December 7, 1907—eight days thereafter. In the interim comment was freely made in the financial districts of Washington that the allotments were being "manipulated" in behalf of the national banks of the country and that "private bidders" were to receive no consideration.

The inducement alleged to have been made to national banks was that for every dollar paid by the national banks for said bonds they would be permitted a drawback of 90 per cent in currency, leaving but 10 per cent, together with the bonds, drawing 2 per cent as collateral.

Thus, as an example, a bank purchasing $100,000 of canal bonds would, in reality, only have to leave $10,000, with the bonds, on deposit in the Treasury, while the $90,000 would be immediately available for loans and other banking purposes. "Placed" at 4 or 5 per cent this sum should realize from $3,600 to $4,500 per annum, while the additional interest of $2,000 on the $100,000 of bonds would make the entire investment show a profit of over $6,000. Not a very bad speculation for the banks!

But how about the private citizen? Should he be able to secure a similar allotment, he is obliged to deposit the full value of the $100,000 worth of bonds, with no possible opportunity of being permitted to withdraw any portion for private investment or speculation.

On December 10 instant these same bonds were quoted in the New York market at $104, and $105 asked. Yet the favored national banks in some instances were enabled to secure allotments at $102.125.

Very sincerely, your obedient servant,

W. M. HARPER, 1217 F st. NW.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 10, 1907.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, we thus have ample opportunity if the Committee on Finance wants to go into it. Here, first, is the question whether or not the issue of bonds was lawful, whether or not the method by which they were issued was according to law, or whether favoritism and unfairness were exhibited.

Coming down to the question of the national banks and their rottenness and corruption, as portrayed in the suspicions held by the English financial world, I simply remind you that eighteen months ago I offered a resolution here and debated it and urged its adoption, calling on the Finance Committee to investigate a bank in Chicago. Merely to keep the record straight, without proposing to comment on it, I ask that the resolution may be read, so that it may go in to show that this is not my first effort to get at some facts in relation to the financial situation and conduct of certain high financiers, I wish to have the resolution which I send to the desk read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested, if there is no objection.

The Secretary read resolution No. 116, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, submitted by Mr. TILLMAN April 16, 1906, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be directed to inquire whether or not the national banks have made contributions in aid of political committees, and if so to what extent and why the facts have not been discovered by the Comptroller of the Currency; and whether or not such contributions have been embezzlements, abstractions, or willful misapplications of the funds of the banks which call for restitutions and criminal prosecutions. Said committee is also directed to inquire whether or not the national banks of Chicago have recently engaged in transactions beyond their lawful powers in connection with the recent failure of a bank in that city, and whether such failure involved illegalities and crimes; and also to inquire whether the national banks in Ohio have been in the habit of paying large sums of money in a secret and illicit manner to the county treasurers of Ohio as a compensation to said treasurers for making deposits of public money with such banks; and to report the facts of the Senate and the opinion of the committee whether any legal proceedings should be instituted on account of the transactions disclosed; and whether the public interest requires any amendments of the existing national banking laws.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I do not propose to enter into that question, but merely to call attention to the fact that after eighteen months' delay the president of that bank is on trial under grave and serious charges made by the Government. I have not had an opportunity to examine into the evidence to learn whether or not the charges have been proved in court. As the man is on trial, I do not care to discuss it at all, but merely call attention to the fact that I did endeavor to get an investigation of the methods pursued by certain national banks in unlawfully lending or taking money which belonged to their depositors, and I asked that legislation be had to stop it.

Now, we have had in the press in the last month statements in regard to the indictments which are pending or are being formulated in Brooklyn, in connection with certain banks and trust companies there. Those indictments are being pressed by the State authorities. There were two national banks in New York which were the first to fail, and desiring to get some information I telegraphed to the district attorney in New York on Saturday. I have here his letter:

Hon. B. R. TILLMAN,
U. S. Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have this afternoon received from you the following telegram: "Will you please send me by mail any detailed information in regard to the National Bank of North America and Mercantile National Bank of America, showing fraudulent and illegal acts on the part of the officials of said banks. I want to address Senate on Monday on currency situation and on panic. The Walsh transaction in Chicago illustrates need of more stringent laws or more stringent enforcement of those we have. I have reason to believe something similar has happened in New York."

In answer thereto I beg to say that for several weeks there has been going on an investigation under the supervision of my office into the affairs of a number of national banks of this city, with a view of ascertaining whether there had been criminal offenses on the part of any of the officers or employees of such banks against the national banking laws, and that the said investigation is not yet finished. Under these circumstances it would be manifestly improper for me to make public any information derived therefrom.

Of course I did not expect to get any information. It is the old game of how not to do it. It is to put off action; to defer any effective investigation; any opening up, or probing. That has been the policy of the Department of Justice and the Department of the Treasury ever since I have been here. The English people ask us to investigate the rotten banks and expose them, so as to relieve the rest of the banks which are not rotten from the odium and suspicion. The people want the same thing. Is there any need for a change in the law? I do not know. I think we have law enough if we could get it honestly and zealously enforced. But it has taken eighteen months to indict a man in Chicago, and all the powers and influences that could be brought to bear were strained to prevent the indictment first, and now are invoked to secure an acquittal, regardless of the evidence. It will take another year and a half before the Government gets after these fellows in New York. The money will be gone. Nobody will go to the penitentiary. The people look on and wonder why the Senate and House do not enact more vigorous or stringent laws, or why the President does not enforce those we have.

The Comptroller of the Treasury, through his examiners, has absolute control and direction of all national banks. I do not charge him with any dereliction or failure to do his duty, but it has been the custom these long years for Comptrollers to act so complaisantly and pleasantly, politely and nicely, toward national banks that almost without exception every one of them who has ever left that office has graduated into the presidency of a trust company or a bank somewhere. There was Dawes. What was the name of our man in Chicago—our so-called Democrat? Eckels. I had a list of them once, but I do not recall them all now. But you all remember. So it goes. All you have to do is to be in the Comptrollership of the Currency for a little while, and be pleasant and nice, and when you leave, if you want to, you can become president of a great financial institution and join the kings of finance. So it goes. And yet the President talks about turning on the light and not being responsible for what the light shows.

Why does not the President turn on the light and turn on the handcuffs, too, when he finds a fellow stealing somebody else's money? So much the better, in his view apparently, to denounce all these infamies of predatory wealth; go over the country making speeches which destroy the confidence of the masses and make them suspicious, make them unwilling to embark their money in enterprises; talk about the villainies of this railroad magnate and that, of this banker and that. I do not happen to find that a solitary one of them has ever been put in prison. So the machinery of our courts is very lame and impotent or the administration is very imperfect, for there is something wrong somewhere. All I know is that the people of the country, I believe, want the Congress of the United States to do something—not something foolish, not something silly, not to act hastily, but they expect us here to display such a grasp of the conditions of the country and to give such relief as they have a right to demand.

What that shall be I am not prepared to say. I am not a financier. But I will say, as far as I am individually concerned, and I think so far as all the Southern people are concerned, if it shall be a question of having money that will not circulate all over the country, we do not want it. We want a dollar in South Carolina to be a dollar in Washington or Maine. We should rather see Treasury notes issued, receivable for taxes and made legal tender for debts, than to see the banks permitted to have their elastic currency based on assets. They want to lend their money and take in stocks and bonds and then turn around and issue notes on the stocks and bonds and loan that money too.

I saw a cartoon the other day which amused me more than anything I have seen in a year. It filled the situation out so completely and covered the whole ground so elaborately that I wish every man, woman, and child in the United States could have seen it. It was one of Berryman's in the Evening Star. A long, lank, lean, hungry Cassius who does too much thinking, with a sort of smile on his face, was on his way to the White House to dine by invitation—Mr. Watson. He had a great wad of greenbacks sticking out of his pocket, and was going over to urge the President to issue Treasury notes to help us out. Mr. Bryan stopped to look on with a quizzical smile on his face, I suppose wondering whether greenbacks and free silver were going to be revived or not, one or either or both, or what. In Mr. Bryan's rear—he did not see him at all, nor did Mr. Watson see him, but Mr. Berryman saw him—passing around behind the house, coming out of the back door of the White House, was a man named Morgan. What Morgan you will all guess. He had a gripsack pretty full; and the only mistake the cartoonist made was that he did not write "bonds" on the gripsack. Watson coming in the front door to urge greenbacks, Morgan going out the back door with the bonds already in his possession, and Bryan looking on and wondering what we were coming to. But that is the condition, as I understand, of this recent bond deal. Interest-bearing securities were sent to New York on a pretended sale, 90 per cent of the proceeds of their sale to be deposited in the same banks which bought the notes; the taxpayers to pay the interest on the notes, and the borrowers from the banks to pay the interest on the 90 per cent whenever they borrow. That is high finance—I will not say Republican finance, but that is what the country has come to under Republican management.

Now, the country may like it. If the country likes it, I suppose I will have to like it too; or at least I will have to stand it. I have asked some questions here, and I wish some one would answer them, not to-day or to-morrow, but any old time any Senator may see fit, and by the time you answer these probably some of my brethren or I will be ready to ask you some more.

ADJOURNMENT OVER CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following concurrent resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Saturday, December 21, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, January 6, 1908.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to fix the date of adjournment to-day. I move that when the House adjourns to-day, it adjourns to meet on Thursday next.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

INCREASED MEMBERSHIP OF CERTAIN COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Do not the rules determine how many Members shall be on each of these committees?

Mr. DALZELL. That is provided by the rules.

Mr. DE ARMOND. This was thought about, then, after the rules were adopted?

Mr. DALZELL. The matter has been the subject of discussion, I understand, between the Speaker and the leader of the minority, looking toward the recognition of increased membership on the part of the minority.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, this simply emphasizes the fact that the rules were adopted rather improvidently and that we might have spent some of the time that we have wasted in adjournments in a consideration of what ought to be in the rules.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

PRINTING FOR COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. MCMORRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution in regard to printing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan offers a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

CONGRESSIONAL PUBLICATIONS.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following Senate resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following Senate resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 1) amending an act relative to the public printing and binding, approved March 1, 1907.

Resolved, etc., That publications ordered printed by Congress, or either House thereof, shall be in four series, namely: One series of reports made by the committees of the Senate, to be known as Senate reports; one series of reports made by the committees of the House of Representatives, to be known as House reports; one series of documents other than reports of committees, the orders for printing which originate in the Senate, to be known as Senate documents, and one series of documents other than committee reports, the orders for printing which originate in the House of Representatives, to be known as House documents. The publications in each series shall be consecutively numbered, the numbers in each series continuing in unbroken sequence throughout the entire term of a Congress, but the foregoing provisions shall not apply to the documents printed for the use of the Senate in executive session: Provided, That of the "usual number," the copies which are intended for distribution to State and Territorial libraries and other designated depositories of all annual or serial publications originating in or prepared by an Executive Department, bureau, office, commission, or board shall not be numbered in the document or report series of either House of Congress, but shall be designated by title and bound as hereinafter provided, and the departmental edition, if any, shall be printed concurrently with the "usual number."

SEC. 2. That in the binding of Congressional documents and reports for distribution by the superintendent of documents to State and Territorial libraries and other designated depositories, every publication of sufficient size on any one subject shall hereafter be bound separately and receive the title suggested by the subject of the volume, and the others shall be distributed in unbound form as soon as printed. The Public Printer shall supply the superintendent of documents sufficient copies of those publications distributed in unbound form, to be bound and distributed to the State and Territorial libraries and other designated depositories for their permanent files. The library edition, as well as all other bound sets of Congressional numbered documents and reports, shall be arranged in volumes and bound in the manner directed by the Joint Committee on Printing.

SEC. 3. That section 2 of an act to amend an act providing for the public printing and binding, and so forth, approved March 1, 1907, is hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have the gentleman explain how this comes before the House without having been acted upon by a committee, and before the appointment of committees?

Mr. BURLESON. There is a standing Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. PAYNE. I should like to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. LANDIS. I do.

Mr. PAYNE. How does this change the present law in regard to the printing of documents?

Mr. LANDIS. Only in this particular. The gentleman from New York will remember that in the last Congress we amended the printing law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. This is an important resolution, which has not been considered by any committee, and the House is entitled to hear what is going on.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entirely correct. The House will be in order.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from New York, I will say that at the last session of Congress we amended the printing laws so as to take from the numbered series of Congressional documents the annual reports and the serials submitted to Congress from the Executive Departments. They would be known thereafter by title alone. We did that in the interest of economy and simplicity in the arrangement for binding. The superintendents of the document rooms of the Senate and House, who had approved or acquiesced in the recommendations of the superintendent of documents in regard to this provision, desire that these particular documents shall be restored to their former status. The superintendent of documents, on further examination, now shares this view. The only change sought by this resolution is to restore the numbers to the copies of these documents which come to Congress. The plan here presented has been approved by the superintendent of documents, the superintendents of the document rooms of the Senate and House, the librarians of the Senate and House, and the chairman of the committee of the American Library Association on relations with the Federal and State governments. In other words, hereafter, as before, the executive documents and the serials will be known by numbers and title instead of by title alone.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. In other words, we return to the old plan.

Mr. LANDIS. In other words, in so far as these copies are concerned, we return to the old plan. That is the only change sought to be brought about by this joint resolution, and in order to bring it about we had to rewrite the entire section.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that gentlemen sitting in my vicinity say that they would like time and opportunity to examine this resolution, and I suggest that the gentleman from Indiana either withdraw it or let it go over until Thursday.

Mr. LANDIS. In reply to the gentleman from New York I would say that I would have done that but for the insistence that comes from the superintendent of documents and the document rooms of the Senate and the House. They state that they are now holding up important printing that is being pressed for, By supplying new title-pages to about twenty documents at this time the readjustment will be complete.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, neither House is accomplishing any legislation at present, and I think it might go over until Thursday, and in the meantime the Members of the House can read the gentleman's explanation and also the resolution.

Mr. LANDIS. I will say that it was presented by me this morning simply in the interest of the Members and the Senators.

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest to the gentleman that he let it go over until Thursday, or I will object, and that will carry it over to Thursday anyway. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I was about to ask if there had been any report to Congress on this subject?

Mr. LANDIS. It has been approved by the Joint Printing Investigation Commission, the Senate Committee on Printing, and the Senate.

Mr. PAYNE. I will object, Mr. Speaker.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that there has been an error in the reference of the bill (H. R. 384) to promote military education in the civil institutions of learning in the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont suggests that there has been an error on the part of the Speaker in referring a bill under the rule to the Committee on Education. Without objection, the bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, there has also been an error in the reference of the bill (H. R. 2389) for the relief of Pinkney Persons. It was referred to the Committee on Claims and it should be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the change of reference will be made.

There was no objection.

DISTRIBUTION OF ROOMS IN THE HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Special Committee on the Distribution of Rooms, I desire to present a partial report. I do not desire to have the report read, but I ask unanimous consent that the report without the plats may be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I will ask if it is not possible to put the plats in the RECORD?

Mr. MANN. In reply to the gentleman from Ohio, I do not think it is practicable to print the plats in the RECORD or as a part of the report; but it is the intention of the committee, if it be practicable in the opinion of those who can do the work, to send to different Members of the House copies of the plats before the drawing takes place. The resolution or report which I have presented provides for the drawing on the 9th of January, but when we call that up we may possibly ask to have it changed to an earlier date. That will go to the House Members in plenty of time in which to see the House office building itself after the Members return from the holiday recess before the drawing takes place. The numbers which we have upon the plats are temporary numbers, and those numbers have all been put up upon the corresponding rooms in the building itself to aid in the examination of the building.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask this question. If we adopt this report this morning——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am not asking to have the report adopted this morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is asking to have it printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

The special committee which was directed to report to the House plans for the distribution of rooms in the House office building and the redistribution of rooms under the control of the House in the Capitol building, beg leave to make a partial report and to recommend the adoption of the accompanying resolution.

There are in the new House office building 410 rooms suitable for committee and Members' office rooms in addition to various rooms designed for folding rooms, storage, caucus, bath, dining, etc., purposes. Under the resolution recommended for adoption, 36 rooms are assigned to 17 committees; 4 rooms assigned to committee stenographers; 1 room assigned as general committee room; 30 rooms reserved for assignment; 2 rooms reserved for dining rooms; 75 rooms, first floor, for allotment to Members; 77 rooms, second floor, for allotment to Members; 84 rooms, third floor, for allotment to Members; 101 rooms, fourth floor, for allotment to Members. The total membership of the House at present, including Delegates and Commissioner from Porto Rico, is 396. Including the Speaker, there are 62 chairmen of committees having committee rooms, which would leave 334 members to be provided with office rooms, if, as provided in the resolution, chairmen of committees are not given individual rooms separate and apart from the committee rooms.

Accompanying the resolution herewith presented, your committee also present plats showing the different floors of the office building above the basement. The plats indicate the rooms which are assigned to committees and the rooms which are reserved for committee purposes for future assignment. Other rooms reserved are also indicated, but the names given to such rooms are merely tentative and no recommendation is made as to these at this time by your committee.

The rooms for allotment as individual office rooms for the Members are shown on the plats with numbers and not colored. In the office building itself the temporary numbers given to the various rooms on the plats have been put upon the rooms in order to aid Members in forming opinions as to choice, etc.

The following is the resolution recommended for adoption:

"Resolved, That the following assignment of rooms, indicated by red coloring and in part by temporary numbers on the plats accompanying this resolution be, and is hereby, made, and the rooms now occupied by the committees named, except where intent is otherwise shown, shall be vacated by such committees as soon as the rooms newly assigned are ready for use, to wit:

ALLOTMENT OF INDIVIDUAL OFFICE ROOMS.

The rooms on the first, second, third, and fourth floors of the House office building not hereby assigned or reserved shall be subject to allotment to Members of the House, other than the Speaker and chairmen of committees, in the following manner:

On Thursday, the 9th day of January, 1908, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the names of the Members of the House entitled to be allotted rooms shall be called by the Clerk in the order and manner provided by Rule XXXII of the House rules regulating the drawing of seats, and a Member as his name is thus announced may immediately designate his choice of one undesignated office room by giving the temporary number thereof to the Clerk, in accordance with the plats accompanying this resolution. Any Member may be represented in his absence by a colleague. The rooms so designated by Members shall be, and are hereby, assigned to such Members, respectively, as their individual office rooms and the room assigned to any Member in the foregoing manner, or in the manner hereafter provided, may be held by such Member so long as he shall remain continuously a Member or Member elect of the House of Representatives, or until he shall relinquish the same, subject, however, to the control of the House at all times.

Any Member or Member elect of the House may file with the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds a request in writing that any individual office room be assigned to him whenever it shall become vacant. If only one such request has been made for any room which shall have become vacant, the room shall be assigned as requested. If two or more requests are made for the same vacant room, preference shall be given to the Member making the request who has been longest in continuous service as a Member and Member elect of the House of Representatives. If two or more Members with equal length of continuous service make request for the same vacant room, preference shall be given to the one first preferring his request. A Member making request for assignment of a vacant room may withdraw the same at any time, and no Member shall have pending at the same time more than one such request.

The assignment of a new room to a Member, upon his request or the appointment of any Member having an individual office room as chairman of a committee having a committee room, shall act as a relinquishment by him of the room previously assigned to him.

Members having rooms assigned to them in the foregoing manner may exchange rooms one with another until the 1st day of April, 1908, by giving notice to the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds prior to said date of such exchange, and the rooms so exchanged shall be considered as originally allotted in that manner. Whereas under an act of Congress of June 5, 1906, the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache, and the Fort Sill Military Wood Reservation, in Oklahoma, was disposed of by competitive bidding under the homestead law to be paid for in five equal installments, one-fifth cash at the end of each consecutive year, and

Whereas said lands were purchased at an average price of more than $16 per acre, and

Whereas there is no provision of law by which said lands can be relinquished by the entrymen and again disposed of to a purchaser or applicant therefor, and

CAUSES OF PRESENT FINANCIAL STRINGENCY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, submitted by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. CULBERSON, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and it is hereby, directed forthwith to inquire fully into the causes of the present financial stringency, and, at as early a date as practicable, make report thereof to the Senate, with such recommendations as in the judgment of the committee will bring speedy relief from existing conditions, prevent their recurrence, and properly conserve the legitimate business and general interests of the country.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that the resolution which has just been read be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, of course I recognize that the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island just made, if insisted upon, will prevail.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Texas desires to submit some remarks upon the resolution, either now or at a subsequent date, I am quite willing to have the resolution lie on the table.

Mr. CULBERSON. I am satisfied that the Senator from Rhode Island will insist upon his motion, either to-day or on some subsequent day, but under the circumstances I ask that the motion be not pressed, at least for the present, and that the resolution lie on the table without losing its place, subject to call.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am quite willing that that course shall be followed.

Mr. CULBERSON. The resolution might be disposed of to-day, but the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] has given notice that he desires to submit some remarks at this time, and, of course, this matter will have to yield to him. I therefore ask that the resolution lie on the table, retaining its place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table.

PERMITS TO RETAIL LIQUOR DEALERS.

Mr. NEWLANDS obtained the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator from Nevada will yield to me, I wish to submit a resolution, as I was not in the Chamber when that order of business was reached. I do not think the resolution which I wish to submit will lead to debate, and I do not think it will take a minute.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. TILLMAN. I send to the desk a resolution, for which I ask immediate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The SECRETARY read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to consider and report whether it is practicable or desirable for the Federal Government to discontinue the issuing of permits to retail liquors in States or counties and municipalities where local option prevails prohibiting the sale of liquors.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CARTER. I ask that the resolution may be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the resolution.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the word "permits" in the resolution ought to be changed to "licenses."

Mr. TILLMAN. The word "permits" is the legal phrase used in the revenue laws, and that is the reason why I used it. There is no license issued by the United States Government to retail liquors; it is a permit to sell liquors.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator may be correct about that.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am sure I am correct about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the present consideration of the resolution; but, as I understand, the Government simply permits the sale of liquor.

Mr. TILLMAN. There is no license issued by the Government; it simply permits the sale.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if I heard the resolution correctly, it reads "permit to retail liquors." "Retail liquor dealers," I suppose would be a better phase, would it not, I will ask the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. TILLMAN. The permit is issued to the dealer. That is the phraseology, I think, of the internal-revenue law; but I am willing that the word "dealers" shall be substituted if Senators desire it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to insert the word "dealers" so as to read "retail liquor dealers."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first question is, whether there is objection to the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the word "liquors," where it first occurs, and to insert in lieu thereof the words "liquor dealers."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

INLAND WATERWAYS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill heretofore introduced by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 500) providing for the appointment of an inland waterway commission and for the improvement and development of the inland waterways of the country with a view to the promotion of transportation between the States and with foreign countries.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I desire to present my views regarding a bill which I introduced a few days since and which reads as follows:

THE INLAND WATERWAY COMMISSION BILL.

A bill (S. 500) providing for the appointment of an inland waterway commission and for the improvement and development of the inland waterways of the country with a view to the promotion of transportation between the States and with foreign countries.

Be it enacted, etc., That a special fund shall be established in the Treasury, to be known as the "inland waterway fund," to be used in the examination and survey for and the development of the inland waterways of the country; and the sum of $50,000,000 is hereby reserved, set aside, and appropriated as such fund.

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to cause to be made examinations and surveys for the development of the inland waterways of the country, including the Great Lakes, the Mississippi River and its tributaries, the navigable rivers of the Gulf of Mexico and their tributaries, the navigable rivers of the Atlantic coast and their tributaries, the navigable rivers of the Pacific coast and their tributaries, and for the connection of such rivers with each other, wherever practicable and desirable, by connecting canals and by coastal canals, with a view to the promotion of transportation between such rivers by vessels of a standard draft; and to investigate all questions relating to the development and improvement of the inland waterways of the country, with a view to the promotion of transportation; and to consider and coordinate the questions of irrigation, swamp-land reclamation, clarification of streams, utilization of water power, prevention of soil waste, protection of forests, regulation of flow, control of floods, transfer facilities and sites and the regulation and control thereof, and such other questions regarding waterways as are related to the development of rivers, lakes, and canals for the purposes of commerce.

SEC. 3. That in order to enable the President to make such examinations, surveys, and investigations and to construct the works provided for by this act he is authorized to appoint an inland waterways commission, to be composed of —— members, and to bring in coordination therewith the Corps of Engineers of the Army, the Bureau of Soils, the Forest Service, the Bureau of Corporations, the Reclamation Service, and other branches of the public service related to waterways, and to appoint such experts and other persons and create such board or boards in connection therewith as the work may require, and to fix the salaries of all commissioners, experts, and other persons employed under this act until the same have been fixed by Congress, the official salary of any official appointed or employed under this act to be deducted from the amount of salary or compensation fixed under the terms of this act.

SEC. 4. That such Commission shall make to the President annually, and at such other periods as may be required either by law or by the order of the President, full and complete reports of all their acts and doings and of all the moneys received and expended in the construction of works and in the performance of their duties in connection therewith, which reports shall be by the President transmitted to Congress; and such Commission shall furthermore give to either House of Congress such information as may at any time be required either by act of Congress or by order of either House of Congress.

The President shall cause to be provided for the use of the commissioners and other employees under this act such offices as may, with the suitable equipment of the same, be necessary and proper in his discretion for the proper discharge of their duties.

SEC. 5. That if after such examination, survey, and estimate such Commission shall determine that any project for the improvement or construction of an inland waterway or coastal waterway is practicable and desirable, it may, with the approval of the President and through the appropriate service, construct or execute, or cause to be let, contracts for the construction or execution of the same, in such portions or sections as it may be practicable to construct and execute as parts of the whole project: Provided, That the necessary moneys therefor are available in the inland waterway fund.

SEC. 6. That such projects may include such collateral works for the irrigation of arid lands, for the reclamation of swamp lands, for the conservation or replacement of forests, for the clarification of streams, and for the utilization of water power as may be deemed advisable in connection with the development of a channel for navigation or as aiding in a compensatory way in the diminution of the cost of such project.

SEC. 7. That such Commission is authorized, with the approval of the President, to enter into cooperation with States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals in such collateral works, and to make arrangements for the proportionate payment of the cost thereof out of the inland waterway fund and by the States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals benefited thereby, in such manner as to secure an equitable distribution of the costs and benefits: Provided, That the cost of such collateral works shall be paid, if practicable, out of funds provided therefor by Congress, but if sufficient provision therefor is not specially made by Congress, such Commission is authorized to pay for the same out of the inland waterway fund, but the total payments made on account of such collateral works from such inland waterway fund shall not exceed 10 per cent thereof, and provision shall be made, as far as practicable, for the reimbursement to such fund of such payments by the States, municipalities, communities, corporations, or individuals benefited thereby: And provided also, That the inland waterways developed shall remain free for all the uses of navigation.

SEC. 8. That such Commission shall make, with the approval of the President, rules and regulations governing the cooperation and compensation to the fund, wherever practicable, by the conveyance of reclamation rights, the lease of water power, and such other means as may be beneficial to the United States and the several States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals entering into such cooperation.

SEC. 9. That in carrying out the provisions of this act regard must be had, as far as practicable, to the equitable apportionment and contemporaneous execution of the projects contemplated under this act among the several waterway systems of the country.

SEC. 10. That the President is authorized, whenever the inland waterway fund is reduced below $20,000,000, to make up the deficiency in such fund by the issue and sale of bonds in such amount and for such time as he shall deem advisable, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding — per cent per annum; but the amount of bonds issued shall not at any time exceed the difference between the cash on hand in such fund and $50,000,000.

Mr. President, the agitation for a deep waterway from St. Louis to the Gulf and from the Lakes to the Gulf has reached such proportions as to create a general demand from every section of the country that a broad and comprehensive plan should be inaugurated for the improvement of all the navigable waterways of the country, and that legislation should be adopted creating a fund for continuous and uninterrupted work, securing a fair apportionment of the work between the different sections of the country, and providing for a businesslike administration with reference both to examination and construction.

The President, realizing this demand, determined to investigate the matter with a view to recommending to Congress such a broad and comprehensive plan; and, as a step in that direction, appointed the Inland Waterway Commission to look into the various questions relating to the inland waterways and their full economic development, and to report to him, with the expectation that, if their recommendation was approved by him, it would be submitted to Congress for its action. The Commission has been in frequent sessions since April last. It has visited nearly every section of the country. Several members of the Commission visited the Pacific coast and inspected the Sacramento, the San Joaquin, and the Columbia rivers. The entire Commission took a tour of the Great Lakes, and also made a trip from St. Paul to the Gulf upon the Mississippi River. Subsequently a majority of the Commission made an examination of the Missouri River.

WATERWAY CONVENTIONS.

In addition to this the Commission has been represented at various conferences and conventions which have been held throughout the country from the Pacific to the Atlantic and from the Lakes to the Gulf upon this important question.

The general interest which the country is showing in the improvement of waterways is manifest in the organization of various river-improvement associations in all parts of the country, and in meetings of these and other associations, the principal object of which is to consider waterway improvement. I shall enumerate some of these.

At Sacramento, Cal., last September was held the National Irrigation Congress, which was turned almost entirely into a discussion of waterways. Delegates were present from all the States west of the Mississippi and from States east of the Mississippi River. The total attendance was about 2,000.

The first week in October witnessed the most imposing pageant in the history of the Mississippi River. The trip of the President down the Mississippi from Keokuk to Memphis, together with governors from nineteen States, Congressmen, and citizens representing the whole Mississippi Valley, made the Deep Waterways Convention at Memphis one that will be significant in the history of the nation. Three thousand delegates were present, besides citizens representing a large number of States.

At Moline, Ill., in October, was held the Upper Mississippi Improvement Convention, at which there were present delegates from five States, reaching the number between four and five hundred.

At Sterling, Ill., in October, was celebrated the opening of the Hennepin Canal, with the governor of Illinois and representatives of four or five States present, and a general attendance of thousands.

In October, the Trans-Mississippi Congress, at Muscogee, was chiefly devoted to the waterway improvement question, and was the largest and most enthusiastic assemblage in the history of that body.

Then came the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Convention at Philadelphia, with a representation of fifteen States and a great and enthusiastic discussion of the improvement of waterways along the Atlantic coast.

At Victoria, Tex., in September, was held a waterway convention, whose special object was a discussion of the improvement of the western Gulf interpassage, and the development of Texas rivers as tributaries to it.

At Birmingham, Ala., in October, was held a meeting of a waterway improvement association, at which two projects were discussed—the eastern Gulf interpassage movement and the Atlantic western project.

The National Drainage Congress, at Baltimore, in November, was devoted largely to a discussion of waterway improvement.

The Ohio Valley Improvement Association met at Wheeling, in October, and discussed the improvement of the Ohio River.

A waterway improvement association met at Grants Pass, Oreg., in September, with a representation of three or four States. There have also been other meetings in Oregon and Washington, and in the State of Montana a waterway improvement association has been formed.

In January, the Missouri Development Association, devoted to waterways improvement, will meet.

These indicate, as I have said, the deep and general interest that the people in various parts of the country are taking in the improvement of waterways.

The Inland Waterways Commission is now engaged in framing a preliminary report to the President, but it has not yet reached a final conclusion. I wish to say, as a member of that commission, that I simply express here my individual views, and that I have introduced in the Senate a bill (S. 500) providing for the appointment of an inland waterway commission for the development of the inland waterways of the country, purely in a tentative way. I invite suggestion, criticism, and amendment, so that the commission may have the advantage of the consideration of this question by Members of both bodies of Congress and by the country at large before it reaches a final conclusion.

GOVERNMENT WORKS.

In the past, Mr. President, it has been the general view of the country that the Government was unable to do constructive work; that it was unable to do such work efficiently; that is was unable to do it economically; that it was unable to do it quickly. The experience of the country within the past few years with two great systems of constructive work has proved the contrary and has proved that the Government is able to do its own work.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will ask the Senator what are the two examples to which he refers?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Those two exceptions are the construction of the Panama Canal and the work of the Reclamation Service. For the work of the Panama Canal service $75,000,000 has already been appropriated, of which about $39,000,000, I believe, has already been spent. The Reclamation Service has a fund of about $39,000,000, a very large proportion of which has already been spent on about twenty-three different projects in fourteen or fifteen different States and Territories. I will not enlarge upon the work of either one of these services. It is sufficient to say that the country is satisfied with the work of both. So far as the region which I represent is concerned—the arid and semiarid region—there is a feeling of universal satisfaction with the energetic and efficient work and the thoroughly organized work that has been done by the Reclamation Service.

Now, Mr. President, in shaping this bill I have endeavored to unite the best features of both those bills.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will permit me a moment further——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am profoundly interested in what the Senator is saying on this whole great plan, and I think the Senator might enlarge there upon the fact that the Reclamation Service and the Panama Canal, as enterprises, are conducted also by officers of the Government, and in the case of the Panama Canal it finally came down to the most efficient work by the officers of the Regular Army. Those two instances I call to the Senator's attention, so that he might put them into his speech. They, however, are not the only ones. There is the telegraph service in Alaska, covering 8,000 miles or more, and other things of that kind.

I ventured to interrupt the Senator for the purpose of directing his attention more particularly to those facts.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am very glad to receive the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana. It is true, as he says, that both of these services are being conducted by officers of the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator suggested very properly that, so far as the Reclamation Service is concerned, the section of country from which he comes—the arid and semiarid region—is well satisfied with what has been done. I come from a section of country, Mr. President, which is neither arid nor semiarid, but I have been a very warm friend of the irrigation project, and I will ask the Senator now, for my personal information, if he can tell me what extent of territory, in acreage or otherwise, has been reclaimed up to the present time? Possibly the Senator has the information, possibly he has not.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am unable to state just now what number of acres have been reclaimed. Many of these works are yet unfinished.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is any one of them completed?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; in Idaho, in my own State, and in other States.

Mr. President, I have endeavored to take the best features of both the Panama Canal act and the reclamation act in shaping this tentative measure which I present for your consideration.

THE INLAND WATERWAY FUND.

In the first place, the bill which I have drawn provides for an inland waterway fund of $50,000,000 and appropriates and sets aside in the Treasury $50,000,000 for that work. It also provides that whenever, as a result of the work and expenditure, the amount in the fund falls below $20,000,000 the President of the United States, unless the fund is made full by legislative appropriation, shall issue bonds for the deficiency, thus giving him power at any time to issue bonds for the difference between $20,000,000 and $50,000,000. The purpose of this is to maintain continuous and uninterrupted work, so that this work shall not be conducted in the disjointed manner in which it has been conducted in the past.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire some information, which I expect the Senator can give me. The suggestion has come to me from many quarters that the Government should set aside—that is the term used—$50,000,000 for this work; but I have been unable to understand just what was meant by setting aside $50,000,000. Is it to be understood that an appropriation to that extent is favored in one lump sum and that $50,000,000 should be withdrawn from the general purposes of the Government to await its expenditure in the Treasury, idle, or that $50,000,000 should be made available from time to time as the necessities of the work may require? It is to that subject I would direct the Senator's attention and inquire as to just what the plan is with reference to the disposition to be made of this sum of $50,000,000 pending the performance of the work or the organization of it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The bill which I have drawn, and which represents merely my individual views, provides this inland waterway fund, sets it apart in the Treasury, and forever dedicates it to this work, so that that money can not be used for any other purpose.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then I understand that so much of this money would remain idle as was not expended until the entire system had been worked out and the $50,000,000 expended; that is, if we should only expend $10,000,000 of it in the next five years, the forty millions would remain idle in the Treasury of the United States. Is that the purpose of the bill?

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is my purpose in providing for this fund so that this fund can not be disturbed in any way and it is forever dedicated to this purpose.

I wish to provide the Inland Waterways Commission that is to do this work with capital for the purpose, and I wish it to handle this capital just as a board of directors of a great constructive corporation would do, without being hampered by Congressional restrictions appropriating a certain sum to this detail and another sum to that. I would give it the right to adjust and to readjust its plans, estimates, and expenditures according to varying conditions, and to finance the work with a view to cooperation with and contributions from States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals benefited by it. I hope to see a commission that will do work, not one whose chief business will be to hang about the committee rooms of Congress. I hope to see a commission of experts that will have the power to initiate both investigation and construction and with ample funds to complete its projects, not a commission that will have to wait upon the tardy initiative of Congress as to projects the details of which it is incapable of dealing with.

I will answer the Senator by saying that if we only contemplate spending $10,000,000 within the next five years, it is best for us not to commence the work at all. My expectation is that we will expend at least $50,000,000 a year for the next five years, perhaps even during the first year.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator does not mean that?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Expend $50,000,000 every year?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That would be a matter for discussion; but perhaps the Senator is right.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is what I shall urge. That is my individual view. My individual view is that within the next ten years the United States should expend at least $500,000,000 in the improvement of its inland waterways; that we ought to enter upon this work contemporaneously in every section of the country; that we should enter upon the work of the rivers of the Pacific coast, upon the rivers of the Atlantic coast, upon the Gulf coast, and upon the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and upon the coastal canals or sheltered waterways which will connect the rivers of the Gulf and Atlantic coast from Texas to Maine. All these works should be commenced and prosecuted contemporaneously. I wish to say further that that is the sentiment of the people of the United States, and Congress will, I have no doubt, accommodate itself to that view of the great public.

CONSTITUTIONAL POWER.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I want to ask the Senator a question as to the bill. Section 6 provides, among other things, for such utilization of water power as may be deemed advisable in connection with the development of a channel for navigation, etc. Does the Senator understand that the General Government has the right to control the waters of the rivers of the States beyond what is necessary for navigation? In other words, does the Senator understand that the Government of the United States can establish water powers inside of the State and use the water? I should like to know what the Senator understands that to mean?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator rather anticipates the order of my argument, but I shall be very glad to answer the question the Senator asks and propose to take up that question later on.

Mr. TELLER. Then I will not interfere with the Senator if he prefers to go on in his own way.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will answer now if the Senator prefers.

Mr. TELLER. Very well.

Mr. NEWLANDS. This bill contemplates the coordination of all the related uses of water and the coordination of all the various services of the Government that have anything to do with water, such as the Engineer Corps of the Army, the Reclamation Service, the Forestry Service, the Bureau of Soils, the Geological Survey, and expects to make them all efficient in developing the highest use of the waters of the country, not only for navigation, but for all the related uses. And in this connection it provides for the cooperation of the nation with States, communities, corporations, or individuals, where such cooperation is necessary in securing the most beneficial use of the waters for all purposes.

Now I come to the question of the Senator from Colorado. The Senator asks me whether I think the nation has the power——

Mr. TELLER. The constitutional power.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The constitutional power to utilize the waters of the rivers for the purpose of making electrical power, for that is the only thing that is suggested. My answer to that is that under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution the nation has control over the rivers for purposes of navigation, and the States thmeselves can not, without the consent of the nation, do anything to the rivers that will interfere with navigation.

Now, what does the development of a river for purposes of navigation involve? Does it involve simply getting a dredging machine for the purpose of removing the shoals and the sand-bars that obstruct navigation or for the purposes of digging a channel which ships of a given draft can traverse? Can it not adopt measures that will prevent the sediment and sand from being deposited in the shoals and sand-bars? Can it not take hold of the treatment of the entire river from the very springs to the mouth for the purpose of promoting navigation?

It may be admitted that the nation has no power to enter upon irrigation as such, except, perhaps, as the owner of the land with the same right that any other proprietor has. It may have no power to engage in the protection and replacement of forests as such. There is no power expressly granted in the Constitution for that. It may have no power to enter the electric-light business. It may have no power to enter in the business per se of clarifying the streams; but if in improving a river for purposes of navigation, for the purpose of promoting interstate and foreign commerce, any of these enterprises will either aid in the maintenance and the securing of a fixed and suitable channel for navigation or diminish the cost of the works for navigation, the Government can not only undertake the great work of securing a channel for the stream, but can engage in the collateral works that are useful and necessary for the harmonious, economical, and comprehensive development of the entire stream for purposes of navigation.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not desire to interfere with the discussion of this question by the Senator in his own line and in his own method, but I would like to say to him that the Supreme Court has passed on these questions at least thirty times in the last sixty years, and I would suggest to him that if he desires to accomplish what he says he does—namely, a general utilization of the waters of the country for navigation—he had better not complicate it with something like a claim on the part of the Government of the right to establish water powers and electrical plants in this country.

The Supreme Court has declared that all the Government has is a franchise in the waters—the right to run ships on the waters, but that it has no ownership whatever in the water, not even in navigable waters, much less in nonnavigable waters.

I myself, Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, am a great believer in the utilization of the waters, and as a friend of the measure I hope those who advocate it will not complicate it with that which is certain to defeat the purpose which they claim they want to accomplish. The States are the owners of the waters, and the States will maintain that ownership, because there are fifty years of unbroken decisions of the Supreme Court in their favor. There is a recent case in which the court has declared that the Government may clean out a stream and may undoubtedly prohibit individuals, or even the States, from filling up a stream and destroying it; but that is an entirely different thing than for the Government to establish a water plant or a power plant, as it is proposed now in the State of California at least, and to demand rental for water which I assert belongs to the State of California and not to the General Government.

In the interest, Mr. President, of this public work, with which I fully sympathize and have for many years, I hope the friends of the measure here will at least understand what the constitutional rights of the Government are, and not attempt to invade the rights of the States.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not propose to follow the Senator from Colorado into a discussion of the question as to who owns the waters of a navigable river. That ownership must be a very elusive one, for every drop of water is gradually making its way from the sources in the mountains to the Gulf and the ocean. I imagine, so far as ownership is concerned, that the ownership of water would be like the ownership of wild beasts—that it would depend upon the absolute subjection to the power and dominion of the party who secures possession.

Mr. TELLER. I can only recommend my colleague in the Senate to study the question of the right of the States to the water, and I think thereafter he will not say it is elusive. It is as positive as the ownership of the land, and parties owning water abutting their land, under certain conditions, are as absolutely the owners of the water, so far as concerns making it useful, if they choose, as they are of the land abutting.

Mr. NEWLANDS. As I stated, I do not propose to follow the Senator into that very interesting discussion because it is not necessary for me to take up that question in order to maintain all that I contend for.

Mr. TELLER. I hope not.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think the Senator will be convinced of that when I get through.

A BROAD AND COMPREHENSIVE TREATMENT.

Now, I ask, what is a broad and comprehensive treatment of a river that is to be used in interstate or foreign commerce for navigation? Take the Mississippi, so far as its western tributaries are concerned; the Missouri, and its tributaries; the Yellowstone; the Madison; the Gallatin; and the Jefferson rivers; farther down, the Platte and the Kaw; farther down, the Arkansas river. All these rivers have their source in the region to which the Senator and I belong—in the snows of the mountains.

PREVENTION OF FLOODS.

Now, what does a rational treatment of that river, so far as concerns its utilization for navigation, involve? It involves for one thing the prevention of floods, for these waters rush down in torrential streams in the spring months and destroy property, and then during the summer and fall months, the waters having rushed down to the ocean and having been wasted, the river itself is reduced to an attenuated stream upon which boats can not float. What does a rational treatment of that river involve? Obviously storage, all along the line, wherever it can be done practicably and economically and with a view to the reasonable cost of the entire enterprise. What does storage upon those upper rivers mean? It means the construction of artificial reservoirs in which these waters are impounded during the period of flood, and from these reservoirs waters are led over the great plains, the arid and the semiarid plains, and used for purposes of cultivation. These plains absorb the water like a sponge and gradually give it out by the process of seepage to the tributary streams of the great river. Give it out when? Give it out when it is most needed for navigation, during the months of July, August, and September. So irrigation is a proper method of treating the river for navigation, for it is one method of impounding the flood waters of these tributary streams, preventing those flood waters from creating destruction below in the spring and preserving them for a beneficent purpose later on in the summer and fall months. In the more humid regions, in which irrigation is not required and in which evaporation is less rapid than in the arid and semiarid districts, the reservoir may be used for the storage of storm and thaw waters, which may be kept impounded, as is now done, for example, in the upper Mississippi and in some foreign countries, until the time of low water, when the contents may be let out in such manner as to maintain navigation throughout the summer.

Now, the Senator's view doubtless would be that the Government has no power to enter upon the reclamation per se of arid lands not in its own ownership. There is no power expressly granted in the Constitution for that purpose, and I believe with the Senator from Colorado that this is a Government of granted powers, and that we can only exercise the granted powers. I shall simply contend for the full exercise of these powers. No one will deny the full power of the Government over the question of interstate and foreign commerce. No one will deny the power of the Government to make a river navigable. If you do not deny that, then the Government can adopt any practicable means to make it navigable, and it need not confine itself to digging a channel when it can by this process of the storage of waters at the heads of these streams and by this process of spreading those waters over the vast arid and semiarid plains suspend the flow of that water until by the process of seepage it gradually goes back to the streams at the time when it is most needed for the maintenance of a full, safe, and sure channel for the purposes of navigation.

FORESTRY.

So it is with forestry. The forests are the conservators of moisture. In a state of nature the streams gathering in forests run clear and in fairly uniform volume throughout the year. The soil is protected from the beating of the storm by the branches and foliage, which break the drops into spray, and this trickles gently down the trunks and along the roots, so that the soil remains open and pervious. This soft, spongy soil is further protected by a mulch of partly decayed leaves, twigs, and shreds of bark and wood; and in the mulch and friable mold the waters of rains and thaws are absorbed as in a sponge, and do not flow off quickly in rills and freshets, but seep slowly through the soil into the permanent springs by which the streams are fed. Denude large areas of their forests, and the rains falling from the heavens rush off the lands in torrential streams and increase the volume of the floods that are so destructive below. We all know that one of the causes of these great and destructive floods has been the destruction of our forests. If, then, the forests are conservators of moisture, if they are natural storage reservoirs of moisture, and if the impounding of these waters in artificial reservoirs for the purpose of holding them until they can swell the volume of the stream below for the purpose of navigation is constitutional, can we not make use of the reservoirs that nature has created and develop them; and if we can do that, can we not take control over large areas of land and replace the forests that have been destroyed?

Of course the Constitution grants no power to the National Government to enter into the timber business or the lumber business as such, but it has the power to make a sure, stable, equal stream for purposes of navigation; and if it can accomplish this by developing the forests, the natural reservoirs of the country, so as to hold these waters in suspense until the time when they are most needed, it has the power to preserve and protect the existing forests, it has the power to replace the forests; and certainly in that connection it has the power to plant trees; and if it has the power to plant trees it has the power to sell the timber which is planted when it becomes unnecessary to the main purpose of the enterprise—the conservation of moisture.

If the forest becomes too crowded, is there any objection to the removal of useless trees, and can you say that because the Constitution has not granted to the Government the power to enter into the lumber business it therefore can not sell that timber as a part of the compensation of the enterprise itself? Would you say with reference to these great reclamation enterprises, which constitute a rational method of treating the river for the purpose of navigation, that the Government can not compensate this fund and diminish the cost of the entire enterprise by selling irrigation rights, thus getting back proportionately from all the lands benefited the cost of the reclamation work and diminishing the cost of the main enterprise—the promotion and development of a navigable stream?

RECLAMATION OF SWAMP LANDS.

But the comprehensive plan for the development of these waterways not only involves reclamation by irrigation and the protection and replacement of forests, but it also involves the drainage of swamp lands below. The reclamation of swamp lands is the antithesis of the irrigation of arid lands. There is too little water on the land above and there is too much below. Why is there too much below? Because the river breaks through its banks, divides itself into numerous channels, creates bayous and sloughs, and thus dedicates vast areas of cultivable land, the richest in the world, to poverty and death.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from Nevada permit an interruption?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. As I said, and as the Senator from New Hampshire said, I think this is one of the very greatest subjects before the American people, and one, perhaps, in which they are as much interested as any other just at the present time. I wish the Senator would follow, till he establishes it more closely, the analogy between the Government's power over the conservation of waters and their control as navigable waters and the power of the Government over forests. For example, one of the most fundamental rules in statutory and constitutional interpretation is that if the power is conceded it carries with it any incidental power necessary to make it complete. So if it be conceded—and that has been thrashed out—that we have the right as a Government to control certain forest reserves, it follows as an incident of that that it is not only our right and our power, but our duty to dispose of what is called "down timber" and "excess timber;" and therefore the Government not only has the right, but it becomes its duty, to become a lumber merchant to that extent.

Again, our power to build the Panama Canal is conceded, let us say. That carries with it the power to do what the Government is now doing; that is, to operate a line of steamships and also to operate a railroad across the Isthmus of Panama. So it can be carried out in numberless instances.

I would be glad if the Senator would spend a little more time in establishing the analogy between the Government's power over the conservation of waters and their control as navigable waters and these other things which the Senator has referred to.

If the Senator from Nevada will permit me for just a moment further. In reference to what was said by the Senator from Colorado, of course it has been held, since Gibbons v. Ogden until now, that the power of the National Government over navigable waters, even wholly within a State, goes to the point that signals and lights may be maintained by the National Government, and it may do everything else that is necessary. The State has no right to establish lights, or signals, even in its own waters, because they might interfere with the navigation of commerce that passes beyond the State lines.

So again, the National Government, in improving waterways, for which we now expend scores of millions every year in the river and harbor bill, has the right to prevent the State from in any way obstructing that waterway. If that was not conceded, of course, it would be destructive of the power to improve it. Therefore, if the establishment by the State of an electric-light plant upon the waters running through the State, which were navigable, interfered with that purpose, the National Government would have the right to prevent the erection of such an electric-light plant. But per contra, if the erection of such an electric-light plant became necessary as an aid to the navigability of the waters, it would necessarily follow, would it not, that we would have the right to construct it?

The Senator will pardon me, but I think it is a vital point in his argument, and if he will follow that analogy a little more closely, it will be agreeable to many of the friends of his measure.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have already gone further into the argument of these questions than I intended when I rose. My purpose was simply to present a statement of the bill and an explanation of its provisions, but I have been drawn out somewhat by the challenge of the Senator from Colorado. It was not my intention to go into all these refinements. However, I will pursue the argument that I was pursuing regarding the various uses of the waters of a stream which tend to the promotion of its navigability, and I will take up in its turn the suggestion that the Senator from Indiana makes with reference to electric power.

I was upon the question of the reclamation of swamp lands, which I stated was the antithesis of the reclamation of arid lands, the swamp lands being at the lower reaches of the streams, the arid lands at the sources of the streams. We all know that a great river in making its way through these lowlands during periods of flood divides itself into numerous channels, which make bayous and sloughs, and create these vast areas of swamp lands, incomparably rich, for they are composed of alluvial soil, and yet are incapable of cultivation because of an excess of moisture. Now, the reclamation of swamp lands as such, unless the Government is the owner of those lands, would not be one of the functions of Government under the granted powers of the Constitution. But the control of the river for purposes of navigation is; and if the control of that river involves the construction of levees along its banks so as to keep the river in its channel, so that the large volume of water can scour the bottom and create a channel fit for navigation, then that is clearly within the powers of the Government. In like manner, when the needs of navigation demand, it is competent for the Government to maintain the volume and regimen of rivers required for commerce by laying drains in such manner as to maintain a flow at low-water stages. The reclamation in both cases is simply incidental and collateral.

COMPENSATORY PROJECTS.

Would you say that when the Government goes to this great expenditure, which involves an incidental benefit to the lands of private owners, it can not seek in some way compensation to the fund for this beneficial work, and thus diminish the cost of the primary enterprise? Can not the Government by cooperation with States, by cooperation with districts, so organize this work as to divide the cost between the States or the localities affected and the National Government? The project might not be feasible at all unless the Government could diminish the cost by putting a certain amount of the cost upon incidental and collateral works of this kind. And so this great plan of developing a river for navigation may involve, and in most cases does involve, the actual reclamation of large areas of swamp land.

WATER POWER.

Now we come to the question of water power. The Government will be compelled not only to construct dams on the tributary streams for irrigation, but sometimes on the great river itself—for the purpose of constructing locks through which vessels can pass, and thus avoid dangerous rapids. If the Government does construct such a dam for the purpose primarily of promoting navigation, will the Senator from Colorado contend that the Government can not diminish the cost of the enterprise by selling the water power created by that dam?

Mr. TELLER. Does the Senator want me to answer his question now?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. That is the very point I wanted to bring to the Senator's attention. That is exactly what I wish to deny. The Government has not any power under the Constitution, for any purpose whatever, to go into business of that character. It has not any right to create a water power and sell the power. If the State did not interfere, the Government would have no such authority under the Constitution. But the State, if it had a proper conception of its rights, would not allow that to be done. The State would say it would do it if it was to be done; and if the Senator will pardon me, some day I will present him a brief on this subject which I think will convince him that my suggestions are fully supported by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

I am not afraid that the Senate will go into anything of that kind. But I do not want to have this initial step, as it were, in this waterway business complicated by what will appear to those who study the law on the subject as an utter impossibility.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I take issue with the Senator upon that question. I shall be very glad to read the brief to which he has referred me, but I can not question the power of the Government to build a dam in a river for the purpose of constructing locks which will be serviceable to navigation.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator has no business to put me in that category. I have never suggested that the Government could not do that.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I was going one step further.

Mr. TELLER. I say most emphatically the Government may do that, but the Government has no right, then, to establish an electric-light plant on it and sell the light. That is what I assert.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator had heard my sentence through, I think he would not have taken exception to it. I will repeat part of what I did say and add to it what I intended to say.

I do not doubt for a moment the power of the Government to construct a dam for the purpose of establishing a lock which will be serviceable to navigation.

Mr. TELLER. Neither do I.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Thus far the Senator agrees with me. Now, I was going to add, nor do I doubt the power of the Government to diminish the cost of that enterprise to the Government by availing itself of the sale of the power created by that dam.

Now, another thing. If the Senator insists that the Government can not do that without the consent of the State, then I say we should take steps in this bill for obtaining the consent of the State.

Mr. TELLER. I deny the right of the Government to do it even with the consent of the State. This Government can not go into any commercial business of that kind.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would not expect the Government to go into the commercial business of peddling out light——

Mr. TELLER. Or water.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Of constructing poles and stringing wires and distributing light throughout an entire community, or distributing power throughout an entire community, but I do contend that it would be entirely within the governmental function to diminish the cost of the great work; and if it can accomplish that result by some method of leasing the power, at the same time so controlling the lease that it will not result in monopoly and oppression, I should say it had that power as a means of diminishing the cost of the enterprise.[a]

But if there is anything in our dual government that prevents the nation from acting without the consent of the State, then I see no reason why the two sovereigns affected should not confer together about the matter—the Union of States, the one sovereign, the individual State where the dam is located, the other. Can we doubt that they would come to some rational conclusion? Would the lesser sovereign deny to the greater sovereign the right to get a value out of that which it itself had created that would be in a measure compensatory of its own expenditures? The two sovereigns can do business with each other just as individuals can; and there is no reason why the Union of States should not enter into an arrangement with an individual State that will present a just solution of the question. If the State has the property rights, for which the Senator contends, it can share with the nation the burthen of cost of a work necessary or useful for both navigation and power. If the Government spends millions of dollars in the construction of a dam, it should certainly have compensation for the power which it itself has created. Common honesty would dictate that.

I did not intend at this time to discuss the question of governmental functions at all; it is a matter of business, and that is what I hope to see established as the basis of this enterprise. I hope to see this great work put upon a business basis. I believe the Government can do work in a businesslike way in carrying out the granted powers, and I believe in giving its agents a pretty free hand to enable them to do business effectively.

The reason why I present this bill now is because I fear that in the future should we enter upon this work Congress may without considering these related questions of use and compensation and cooperation put the administrative agents of the Government in a strait-jacket and thus prevent them from conducting the work in a businesslike way.

I do not intend, Mr. President, to be drawn off into nice refinements as to constitutional power. I do not propose to balance the power of the National Government with the power of the State in an individual matter. Here is an enterprise

[a] In fact, that is just what the Government is doing now, and has done for several years, under statutory authority. The legislation has so often been repeated and has so long remained unquestioned that the governmental policy with respect to water power may be regarded as established. Under this policy the Federal Government reserves the right, when authority is given to private corporations to dam actually or possibly navigable streams for the development of power, to use without charge so much of that power as may be required for specific uses by the Government, this reservation being in the nature of a consideration. When the works are constructed cooperatively between the Federal Government and prospective powers users, then the Government reserves rights of administration and specific uses, and also limits the lease or authority to the private party to use the power to a specified period; while, if the work is constructed at the cost of the Federal Government, then the statutes authorize the leasing of the power developed thereby under customary governmental restrictions as to advertising, etc. (The first case is covered by the provision of the general "Act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," to the effect that "The person owning such dam * * * shall grant to the United States a free use of water power for building and operating" any constructions which may at any time be required "in the interest of navigation." (U. S. Stat. L., vol. 34, p. 386.) And this provision is repeatedly affirmed in special laws of various dates. The second case is exemplified by "An act to enable the Secretary of War to permit the erection of a lock and dam in aid of navigation in the Tennessee River near Chattanooga, Tenn., and for other purposes" (U. S. Stat. L., vol. 33, p. 309), in which it is provided in section 4 "That in consideration of the construction of said lock and dam, free of cost to the United States, * * * the United States hereby grants * * * such rights as it possesses to use the water power produced by said dam and to convert the same into electric power or otherwise utilize it for a period of ninety-nine years: Provided, That it or they [the grantees] shall furnish the necessary electric current while its or their power plant is in operation to move the gates and operate the locks and to light the United States buildings and grounds free of cost to the United States: And provided further, * * * That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to prescribe regulations to govern the use of the said water power and the operations of the plant and force employed in connection therewith." The case of leasing is covered, for example, in the provision of the river and harbor act approved June 13, 1902 (U. S. Stat. L., vol. 32, p. 358), under the item for "Improving Cumberland River, Tenn., above Nashville," as follows: "And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to grant leases or licenses to the highest responsible bidder for the use of the water power created by said dam, at such a rate and on such conditions and for such periods of time as may seem to him expedient * * * : Provided, That any lease or license so granted shall be limited to the use of the surplus water not required for navigation * * * : Provided further, That before leasing or licensing such water privileges, or issuing permits for the construction and operation of such canals, or otherwise disposing of any water power or privilege, the Secretary of War shall first advertise the same in one or more daily papers at Nashville for sixty days immediately preceding, stating specifically the right or privilege proposed to be leased or conveyed, with its exact limitations, inviting bids for the same, and he may, in his discretion, then lease the same for a specific term of years at so much per year, to be paid semiannually in cash into the Treasury, and the Secretary of War shall reserve the right to reject any or all bids.") which is of the greatest importance to the entire country. We propose in aid of the development of commerce between the States, and commerce with foreign nations, exclusively within the jurisdiction of the National Government, to enter upon this great work of utilizing our rivers in a businesslike way for every beneficial purpose to which they can be put.

We must realize that it is not wise to take up simply one use of the river, for navigability, and lose sight of all the other uses, when the adoption of the other uses and the development of the other uses will diminish the cost of the enterprise and make it more efficient for the public good. The cost might be entirely prohibitory if it were not for the correlated uses and the contribution or compensation secured through them, for this is a work which can be accomplished either by the National Government itself or by the cooperation of the National Government with States, with corporations, with municipalities, and with individuals.

CLARIFICATION OF STREAMS.

We can not only take up this question of the utilization of water power beneficial to the entire people, and with a view to economy in the enterprise itself, but we can take up with it the question of the clarification of the streams. That is a matter, you say, of sanitation, affecting the people of the towns and cities along the borders of the streams. But you must recollect that these great rivers are full of sediment and sand, every particle of which is a destructive tool when directed against the banks of the river. Clear waters are not nearly so destructive or obstructive as muddy waters, as water filled with sand or soil. It is well demonstrated that every particle of soil, every particle of sand in the water, is a destructive agent. When deposited in the shoals and bars it obstructs the channel. When suspended in the water and driven by the force of the current against the banks of the river it breaks them down, and the broken bank carried down in the current sinks within a few miles and makes the shoal or bar.

What do we find in the great rivers that pass through alluvial bottoms? The banks dissolve like sugar when the force of the water is directed against them. A capricious stream like the Missouri River makes its way through a bottom of this kind from Kansas City to St. Louis, a distance of about 300 miles, a valley from 4 to 10 miles in width, bounded by bluffs on either side; and that river, during the period of flood, its banks dissolving like sugar before the force of the water, can make its way anywhere in the alluvial bottom between the bluffs, so that the farm of to-day becomes the swamp to-morrow, and the river bed of to-day becomes the cultivated farm to-morrow.

We can clarify that turgid water, swollen with sediment and sand. How? By the prevention of soil waste and by the protection of the banks by willow and stone revetment. There washes down the Mississippi River every year pretty nearly a continent of the best soil. At New Orleans to-day the alluvial soil is twelve hundred feet deep.

The great problem we have had in the lower reaches of the Mississippi has been the control of the passes, the river making its way to the Gulf through three passes, building up on either side, by the deposit of sand and sediment, a continent. So it is hardly an exaggeration to say that in time the great Gulf itself will become a continent.

Now, is the Government simply to dredge out that sand and sediment when it settles down in the bed of the stream and deposit it somewhere else, whence it will make its way gradually back to the stream, or can it take measures to prevent that sediment and sand from coming into the stream? Can it not take measures to prevent this soil waste and this bank destruction? It is fair to say that in time the prevention of soil waste can be brought about by proper methods of cultivation enjoined by the National Government, perhaps as a matter of persuasion at first, though it might well become a matter of compulsion. The conservation and development of the natural resources of the country—the forest, the land, the water—for every purpose require the scientific treatment of a stream and the full consideration of every related use.

How is this to be done? In the first place, this fund is created to which I have referred, a fund for uninterrupted and continuous work, the dedication of $50,000,000 immediately to this work. The Senator from Idaho says it may lie idle for a time. There is $250,000,000 or $300,000,000 in the Treasury now that is lying idle. The Treasury deposits a large portion of it in banks of the country and receives no compensation from it. It will be no more idle than it is now.

It is incumbent upon us to show our fixed and determined purpose that this work shall commence, and that it shall be prosecuted without interruption, and not in the elusive and disjointed way in which it has been prosecuted heretofore.

AN ADMINISTRATIVE MATTER.

Now, this bill gives the executive department great power, and I have no doubt that objection will be urged. I believe in giving the executive department full power in this matter, because it is an administrative matter. I believe in preserving the boundaries of the functions of the Government; and I insist upon it that Congress has attended too much to administrative matters, and the very reason of the inefficiency of our work upon our rivers and harbors has been that Congress has sought to do administrative work and has done it badly, as it always will do it badly.

Ninety men in the Senate and four hundred or more in the House working on legislation for the country do not constitute efficient bodies for administrative work. Wherever administrative work is to be done I believe in intrusting it to the executive department and putting the responsibility upon the Executive. We did this with reference to the reclamation act. After having educated the entire country to the desirability of entering upon the great reclamation work, the Western men found that they were unable to move because they were divided among themselves as to what should be done. Each man wanted a project first undertaken in his own State and was unwilling to concede that another State had superiority or advantage as to priority. We were in confusion as to the methods of administration. Finally we got together, and what did we conclude to do? We passed a bill creating a fund derived from the sales of the public lands of the country and dedicated that fund forever to this work. Then we gave the power to the Secretary of the Interior to go ahead and investigate the projects and if he found them feasible to do the work, and the only limitation put upon his power was that he should not let a contract unless the money for its payment was in the fund. That was the only limitation. We did not go into details regarding the organization. There can be no effective organization which is not the result of the process of evolution. Let Congress attempt to organize at the start a great working force of this kind, and it will always fail. They will have to come back to Congress for amendatory and supplementary legislation, all delaying the prosecution of the work. We did the simple thing and put the responsibility upon the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Interior accepted the responsibility and held the responsibility. Congress of course reserved to itself all the powers of supervision, of criticism, of examination. Reports were required. The officers of the Service were compelled to come before the committees and give full expositions of their work. Committees visited the works themselves and made actual inspection, and then upon their return to Congress summoned the officials before them and examined them upon matters concerning which they desired information.

So the whole service, under the critical eye of Congress, but with full powers of administration, has advanced and accomplished a great work. It has in the short period of its existence removed, I believe, twice as many cubic yards of earth as have been removed in the Panama Canal. It has constructed works of great magnitude and has considered problems, many of which were as difficult as those involved in the Panama construction. We have organized in the Reclamation Service a body of skilled engineers capable of undertaking any work of construction from the construction of a canal to the construction of a railroad and the development of the inland waterways themselves.

So it was with the Panama construction. Accidentally we blundered there into wise legislation. Congress was divided into contending forces as to whether we should have the canal at Panama or at Nicaragua. Different views prevailed as to whether it should be a lock canal or a sea-level canal. There would have been the widest divergence of views as to all the details of operation. But in the confusion a simple bill, I believe drawn by Senator Spooner of Wisconsin, appropriated $50,000,000 for the work and gave the President full power to go ahead and do it. We all know how that has worked out.

Suppose we had started in the first place and insisted upon it that all the plans should be submitted to committees of Congress with their differences of opinion, and to Congress itself with their differences of opinion, we would have been debating to-day over mere matters of detail. But out of the very necessity of the situation, inasmuch as Congress was unable to agree, a simple bill was prepared which gave the President full power. Does anyone contend that the President has abused that power? Is there any President whom we can elect who will be so dishonest or so inefficient as to abuse that power? He has gone about in a businesslike way to create an organization, each organization in itself tentative at the start. I believe the Panama Canal service has been reorganized three times. First we had the Walker Commission, and then we had the Shonts Commission, and then we had the Goethals Commission, a commission the same in number, authorized, I believe, by Congress, but maintained in organization at the will of the Executive. We were probably unwise in compelling the Executive to have a commission of nine men. He himself in a recent message or in a recent speech has indicated that perhaps a more efficient method of organization would be one commissioner, with subordinates, so that one person could be held responsible for the work.

The first two commissions held their sessions here. The last commission is located in Panama, and consists mainly of officers of the Government, an engineer officer of the Army, an engineer officer of the Navy, and a medical officer of the Army, who has done the sanitation work of that district. After various experiments the President has placed the control of the work in the Engineer Corps of the Army, noted for its efficiency, integrity, and high sense of honor—a corps which has been compelled thus far to adapt itself to the repressive policy of the nation as to rivers and harbors, but which, under a progressive policy and aided by the other scientific services of the Government in matters relating to their jurisdiction, will accomplish as brilliant a work in our inland waterways as it is now accomplishing at Panama. We have given the Executive a free hand, and we have been wise in giving him a free hand. Had we sought to impose upon him Congressional restraints and put him in a Congressional strait-jacket, the work would not have advanced as it has advanced.

So I contend that in this case we should give the President the power not only to enter upon the construction of the work, but to make the examinations and the surveys, and to do it without further authority from Congress, and to appoint such boards and commissions and agents and experts as in his judgment may seem proper, and to fix their salaries until Congress fixes them. The organization can best be worked out by an executive officer and not through the wisdom of Congress.

It will be observed that the Forest Service, the Reclamation Service and the Panama Canal Service are all engaged in a variety of works incidental to the main enterprises, and they are engaged not only in constructing them, but in operating them. Such works include waterworks, electric-light plants, roads, railroads, electric roads, cement mills, and other works of similar character, all incidental and collateral to the main enterprises.

Can it be maintained that the Government should have less power when, in the interest of interstate and foreign commerce, it enters upon the artificialization of rivers and the construction of canals?

It will also be observed that the Panama Canal Service is to be made compensatory by the charging of tolls, the Forest Service by the sale of timber and by charges for grazing permits, and the Reclamation Service by the sale of water rights. So far as the Forest Service and the Reclamation Service are concerned, they will be absolutely self-compensatory. In the case of the Inland Waterways Service it is proposed that the artificialized rivers and canals shall be free to navigation and that no tolls shall be imposed. Is it not, therefore, of all the more importance that the collateral works undertaken by this service through other appropriate services of the Government for the purpose of fully developing every profitable and beneficial use of our rivers shall be made self-compensatory as far as practicable and that wherever the cooperation of States, municipalities, communities, corporations, or individuals is necessary to accomplish this purpose, such cooperation shall be secured? No one can measure the future value of the water power of the country in the development of electricity. It is probable that this new force has a future value equal to that of all the coal supplies of the country.

In organizing this great work, an ample fund should be immediately provided and as free a hand as possible given to the Executive. In the case of the Reclamation Service, the method of securing a revolving fund from the proceeds of the sales of public lands and of water rights has proven an incentive and an inspiration to the best efforts of those in charge of the work. The methods are those of a business house which knows its condition at all times. Under such a method the Government organization knows just what to depend upon. It can plan for the future and look ahead without uncertainty as to the size of appropriations. Furthermore, it is inspired to work for practical results, for early and considerable returns which, by the application of business methods, can be again applied to produce more returns. No questions of such magnitude, where a long look ahead is necessary and a comprehensive plan for the future imperative, should be hampered at its beginning by uncertainty of Congressional action. Those in charge should know at all times on what they can depend and what results are expected of them. It is therefore essential that an ample fund should be provided and that provision should be made for its replenishment by the sale of bonds whenever Congressional appropriation fails. As free a hand as possible in organization should be given, and particularly during the first few years. After the organization is perfected and its work reduced to a system, then Congress can, if it chooses, substitute the old plan of Congressional initiative as to investigation, as to projects, and as to construction in each particular case.

PROVISIONS OF THE BILL.

The bill provides that the President in executing this work is "to consider and coordinate the questions of irrigation, swamp-land reclamation, clarification of streams, utilization of water power, prevention of soil waste, protection of forests, regulation of flow, control of floods, transfer facilities and sites and the regulation and control thereof, and such other questions regarding waterways as are related to the development of rivers, lakes, and canals for the purposes of commerce."

Section 3 provides that in order to enable the President to make such examinations, surveys, and investigations, and to construct the work and enter upon the construction, he is authorized to appoint an inland waterways commission and to bring in coordination therewith the Corps of Engineers of the Army, the Chief of the Reclamation Service, the Chief of the Bureau of Soils, the Chief of the Bureau of Forestry, and, I might as well add, the chief of the Panama Canal service, for doubtless the observation and experience of all these officials will be beneficial in this great work.

Section 4 provides that the commission shall make full and complete reports of all their acts and doings to the President and to Congress, or to either body of Congress.

Section 5 provides—

That if after such examination, survey, and estimate, such commission shall determine that any project for the improvement or construction of an inland waterway or coastal waterway is practicable and desirable, it may, with the approval of the President and through the appropriate service, construct or execute, or cause to be let, contracts for the construction or execution of the same, in such portions or sections as it may be practicable to construct and execute as parts of the whole project: Provided, That the necessary moneys therefor are available in the inland waterway fund.

This therefore gives the power to the President, without further authority from Congress, to immediately enter upon the construction of these works which are determined to be feasible and desirable.

Section 6 provides—

That such projects may include such collateral works for the irrigation of arid lands, for the reclamation of swamp lands, for the conservation or replacement of forests, for the clarification of streams, and for the utilization of water power as may be deemed advisable in connection with the development of a channel for navigation or as aiding in a compensatory way in the diminution of the cost of such project.

Section 7 is also a very valuable section. It provides—

That such Commission is authorized, with the approval of the President, to enter into cooperation with States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals in such collateral works, and to make arrangements for the proportionate payment of the cost thereof out of the inland waterway fund and by the States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals benefited thereby, in such manner as to secure an equitable distribution of the costs and benefits: Provided, That the cost of such collateral works shall be paid, if practicable, out of funds provided therefor by Congress, but if sufficient provision therefor is not specially made by Congress, such Commission is authorized to pay for the same out of the inland waterway fund, but the total payments made on account of such collateral works from such inland waterway fund shall not exceed 10 per cent thereof, and provision shall be made, as far as practicable, for the reimbursement to such fund of such payments by the States, municipalities, communities, corporations, or individuals benefited thereby: And provided also, That the inland waterways developed shall remain free for all the uses of navigation.

EQUITABLE APPORTIONMENT.

Another section provides that regard must be had "to the equitable apportionment and contemporaneous execution of the projects contemplated under this act among the several waterway systems of the country," so that every section of the country will feel that it is directly interested in this legislation and in this fund, and every section will feel that contemporaneous work will be conducted throughout the entire country upon feasible projects.

Mr. President, it is useless to propose in the Congress of the United States any individual project. The people of this country are not prepared to enter upon this work unless we prepare a comprehensive plan that will include the entire country.

This work is not so difficult as many think. So far as the Pacific coast is concerned it involves simply the Columbia River, the Sacramento and the San Joaquin rivers, and the consideration of the related questions there of the irrigation of arid lands and the reclamation of swamp lands; and as to those projects they will be largely self-compensatory if we provide in this bill for proper cooperation with States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals.

You say the Government goes into partnership. No partnership, of course, is involved, but cooperation is involved; and if by uniting the powers of the States and the powers of communities and the powers of individuals with the powers of the National Government in this great work we can diminish the cost to the General Government and make the project which would otherwise be so costly as to be impracticable absolutely feasible, shall we hesitate to enlist that cooperation? Good business judgment requires it. The coordination of all the Government services of the country related to the use of water, the cooperation of the Nation with every State, every municipality, every community, every corporation, and every individual capable and willing to enter into this work and which will bear its proportion of the expense, will result in the conservation of the natural resources of the country and their preservation from monopoly.

COLLATERAL WORKS AND COMPENSATION NECESSARY.

It would be very nice, of course, for the United States to conduct these great works without view to any compensation to itself or benefits conferred upon others. It would be very nice for it to construct great dams costing millions of dollars and then turn them all over, under noxious State legislation, to great monopolies that would use them for the oppression of the people.

It would be very nice for Congress to build up forests, to preserve forests, to replace forests, and then let the lumber trust utilize the fruits of their labor. But I assume that when the American people determine to go into business in the development of these inland waterways they will conduct the business in a businesslike way, and they will not stand upon refinements as to the boundaries between the Government and the States; and where they find that there is any difficulty as to constitutional power in order to do a desirable thing, promotive of navigation, and that the cooperation of a State is necessary, they will insist upon the cooperation of both for the common good. All that we must provide is a board of experts capable of making broad and comprehensive plans for the common good, and public sentiment will force cooperation.

Mr. President, I alluded a few moments ago to the simplicity of the problem before us, and gave as an illustration the rivers of the Pacific coast. The problems of the other waterways are not more difficult. The connection of the Great Lakes with the Ohio and the Mississippi is not difficult. The treatment of the Mississippi and its tributaries is not difficult. It will not be difficult to establish a standard channel. It will not be difficult to treat the Gulf rivers. It will not be difficult to construct the coastal canals along the Gulf and the Atlantic, which, connecting bays, sounds, and rivers together, will open up all under the protection of sheltered waterways to boats of standard draft. Artificialization of waterways and construction of canals are as old as civilization. All that is required is good plans, made by competent experts and carried out continuously under proper administration.

Now, Mr. President, I hardly dared venture to hope that in presenting the bill at this time, with the holidays approaching, I should have the opportunity of presenting my views at all fully. I did not expect it. My purpose was simply to put upon record here an explanation of the bill, so that it would go out in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to the country, so that it could go to these great organizations whose members are interested in the development of inland waterways and aid somewhat in the development of public opinion upon this question. Congress rarely creates public opinion; it records public opinion. The real argument of the legislator who wishes to do something in a businesslike way should go to the country and not to Congress.

I will ask leave to print with my remarks Senate bill No. 500, Senate bill No. 499, certain statistics of the Reclamation Service and of the Panama service and the forest reserves, and also an article which I prepared for the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, entitled "The use and development of the American waterways."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

BREAKING DOWN OF THE RAILWAY SYSTEM.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to add that this question of waterway transportation is, of course, only a part of the general subject of transportation. The railway service of the country is much broken down. The railroads of the country, when there was less business than there is now, sought to increase their tonnage by carrying cheap and bulky products long distances at low prices, and they thus entered upon a carriage which has been mainly absorbed in other countries by waterways. This bulky carriage has absorbed so large a proportion of their facilities that suddenly, with the great increase in production and population, they found themselves unable to meet the demands of the country. At that time an agitation arose for the regulation of rates and for the better control of the railroads themselves. The railroads, on the one side, regarded their properties as private properties and resented legislative intrusion. The people, on the other hand, regarded them as public servants charged by the law with the performance of public duties, entitled only to a just compensation, that compensation to be fixed by the public either in the shape of tolls or the limitation of return upon capital in the shape of dividends. That contest has not yet reached the end.

The railroads have now reached the point where they admit in some degree the powers and the rights of the public. They now talk about cooperation; they will talk later on about obedience; and obedience is what the American people demand. The only limitation upon the power of the American people over the highways and over common carriers is that the legislation shall not be confiscatory in character. That contest is not yet ended. Meanwhile, the finances of the railroads have been embarrassed; rates of interest have gone up; and the very agitation which has gone on has affected their negotiations in foreign countries for cheap money. They have been unable, even if they willed it, to keep up with the necessary construction in order to meet the demands of increasing population and of business. One eminent railway man declares that it will be necessary for these railroads to expend, I believe, within the next five years, five and one-half billions of money in order to meet the requirements of the country. We all realize that it is now impossible for them to get the money. We might enable them to get the money if we stopped this agitation; but the American people will not rest, whatever may be the consequences, until the true status of the common carrier is ascertained and determined as that of a public servant. So that we can not hope for such conditions as will enable them to finance the construction that is necessary. It is therefore of great importance that we should develop these waterways and that we should develop them quickly.

COORDINATION OF RAIL AND WATER TRANSPORTATION.

It would startle the country, perhaps, if we were to say that $100,000,000 annually for the next five years should be expended; but I believe it ought to be expended in order to meet the requirements of transportation, and the public mind must become accustomed to it. After it is all expended the business of the railroads will not be injured. They will have more than they can then carry, and their carriage will be of products more compensatory than the cheap and bulky products that will be carried by water transportation.

We have had a most marvelous railroad development in this country, which has surpassed that of any other part of the world. But our development has not been as rational, as comprehensive, and as scientific in the matter of transportation as has that of Germany. Her railway transportation, her river and canal transportation, and her ocean transportation have been dovetailed in such a fashion as to make her carriers the most efficient servants of production and of commerce in the world.

This movement is not one of hostility to the railroads. It is one that supplements the railroad system of the country. If we can add to our ocean service so that that ocean service and the river and canal service and the railroad service of the country will act in cooperation as the handmaidens of production and commerce, we shall have marvelous results.

After we get these waterways developed the question then will be, How shall we administer them? Are the railroads to be allowed to put down their rates during the navigation season to the destruction of their river competitors and to put them up during the winter season when that competition ceases? Shall we permit one public servant to destroy another public servant necessary to the public good? We might crowd these rivers with boats, but capital, regardful of the bitter experience of the past, will hesitate to enter upon the enterprise. As we passed down the Mississippi River we hardly saw a boat. On both sides of the river we saw long trains of cars carrying the products of the country. If the railroads refuse to act in cooperation with the rivers in the future, as they have in the past, they may paralyze the very instrumentalities which we create for interstate and foreign commerce.

We must ourselves—the nation must—create the corporations that are to act as waterway carriers. We should not submit the incorporation of these great public servants engaged in interstate carriage to the shifting legislation of 46 different States. There is no river boat that on its course will not in going from bank to bank move from one State to another in interstate commerce. The nation should create its own public corporate servants, and we should protect them.

We may find it necessary in creating these instrumentalities of interstate commerce to exempt them from taxation, State and national, for a limited period. The power is, in my judgment, clear. The nation can certainly exempt them from its own taxation, and can refuse to permit a sovereign State, without the nation's consent, to place a burden that might be destructive upon a national instrumentality. We may have to protect them against unfair and unjust competition. We may have to compel the coordination of the railroads with them. The railroads to-day have all the terminal facilities upon the rivers. They have the depots and the stations and the tracks. They have all the spaces that will be required for river commerce. The nation can not permit these national instrumentalities to be subject to the caprice of selfish interests.

All this can be adjusted if we only go further and provide that as to the great national systems of railways, eight or ten in number, each one of them having from ten to twenty thousand miles of track and traversing between fifteen and twenty States—these mergers shall come under a national charter. We shall then ourselves have created the public agents of the nation the servants of the nation for the adequate development of interstate and foreign transportation.

THE NATIONAL POWERS.

It may be said that we have not the power to compel the merger of such corporations under a national charter. I admit that we can not forcibly go into a State and compel a State to force a State corporation to come within the national merger, but the nation can authorize public carriers, common carriers, incorporated under its laws, to construct new interstate lines, and it can, by the process of persuasion, induce the States, driven by the demands of their own people, to permit these parts of great interstate systems to get together under one national control and charter.

The change will not mean an invasion of the powers and rights of the States. At present we have State corporations engaging also in interstate transportation. Is it not just as logical to have national interstate corporations engage in State transportation? The same public agent, whether State or national, can now engage in both State and interstate transportation. As to the former it would be subject to the State regulation; as to the latter it would be subject to national regulation, whether the corporate agent were incorporated under State or national charter. Nor would the police powers of the States or the jurisdiction of the State courts be affected by national charter. The national-bank act, under which the jurisdiction of State courts is maintained, is an illustration of that. If we can nationally incorporate these great railway carriers, and if we can nationally incorporate river carriers, and if we can nationally incorporate ocean carriers, the entire people will then have these public servants under their control, and by the unity and simplicity of the operation the service can be made profitable to the carriers, just to the public, and efficient in the promotion of interstate and foreign commerce.

I am aware that some of my friends call this a centralization of power. Some of my friends on this side of the House are accustomed to apply that term to any power which is exercised by the National Government.

The National Government has not, in my judgment, commenced to exercise its powers under the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution. It has been prevented from exercising the powers which the people granted to the nation for a beneficent purpose. The main purpose of the formation of the Union was to unite all the States in matters relating to the national defense and to the protection of interstate and foreign commerce. The development of interstate and foreign commerce was the primary cause of the Constitution and of the Union. The growth of transportation has been an accidental growth from a point in one State to another point in the same State. Gradually this accidental growth has advanced until, either under the laws of the States, or outside of the law, or against the law, or in evasion of the law, great systems of railways have been in fact, though not in law, nationalized, unionized, running almost from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf. Will any one deny that the combination has been beneficial, whatever we may say about the methods employed, about the capitalization issued, about the power in politics exercised by these great political masters that ought to be public servants?

Would you to-day enter upon a process of decentralization? Would you attempt to divide these systems up into the units of which they were once composed, each unit comprised within State lines? You would not? Then legalize them under proper restraints as to capitalization, under proper restraints as to profits, and legalize them by the action of the only sovereign capable of dealing with the question.

NOT CENTRALIZATION, BUT UNIONIZATION.

Centralization! Is that the right term? I should say "unionization." The exercise of the granted powers of the Constitution does not involve the centralization of power. It involves simply the unionizing of the forces of the entire people of the country in matters clearly intrusted to the Union of States. This Union is composed of forty-six States. We are all parts of this Union. This nation is not a separate entity afar off, exercising jurisdiction and control and dominion without our participation in it. The States constitute this Union; and they entered into this Union for certain beneficial purposes, one of which was the advancement of interstate and foreign commerce. That involves the creation of the instrumentalities for interstate and foreign commerce, the creation of the public servants that are to engage in interstate and foreign commerce by the nation and not by a single State of the least public virtue, absolutely controlled by the corporate carriers, who ought to be the servants of the nation. There is no centralization about it. We unionize the forces of the nation under the powers granted to the nation, of which each State forms a component part. If the States were all separate, then would they not have to get together by treaty and settle many matters? We have the best kind of treaty making under our system, the treaty making of this legislative body and the other legislative body—the Congress of the United States—a permanent treaty-making Congress, imposing its will upon each one of the forty-six sovereign States in matters intrusted to it for final determination.

I have recently introduced a bill (S. 499) which in most particulars is identical with a bill introduced by me over two years ago, for the national incorporation of rail, river, and ocean carriers. I shall insert a copy in these remarks in the hope that it will be carefully considered in connection with the development of our waterways. I invite also as to this bill the criticism, suggestion, and amendment which I have invited regarding Senate bill 500.

The bill referred to is as follows:

A bill (S. 499) for the formation of national corporations for railroad and navigation lines engaged in interstate and foreign commerce.

Be it enacted, etc., That any number of persons not less than fifteen may, under and subject to the requirements and conditions of this act provided, form a corporation for the purpose of constructing, equipping, maintaining, improving, and extending, and, as a common carrier, operating, a line or lines of railroad or navigation between points in different States of the United States, or between a State and a Territory, or in a Territory, or between a State and the District of Columbia, or between the United States and foreign countries, or for the purpose of acquiring by purchase or lease and operating any such line or lines of railroad or navigation already constructed or established, or for all of such purposes.

POWERS.

SEC. 2. That every corporation organized under this act shall have powers and be subject to restrictions as follows:

(a) To assume a corporate name, and under such name to have corporate succession for a period stated in its certificate of incorporation, and if no other period be therein named, such succession shall be perpetual.

(b) To sue and be sued in its corporate name.

(c) To issue bonds and capital stock as hereinafter provided.

(d) To adopt, use, and alter a corporate seal.

(e) To elect all necessary officers and appoint managers and agents as hereinafter provided.

(f) To hold, purchase, convey, mortgage, or lease such real or personal property as the lawful purposes of the corporation may require, including the right to acquire and hold the capital stock or bonds, or both, of other railroad corporations and corporations properly subsidiary or incidental to the management and operation of the railroad business, including navigation lines, and to lease the property of such other corporations: Provided, That such right to acquire and hold capital stock of other railroad corporations and corporations so subsidiary thereto shall be exercised only by a national railway corporation which itself operates the railroad or navigation lines of which the stock is so acquired and held.

(g) To manage its business, make contracts, incur liabilities, and borrow money, subject to the requirements or provisions or other conditions in this act contained.

(h) To make by-laws not inconsistent with the laws applicable to such corporation or the rules of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

CAPITALIZATION.

SEC. 3. That such corporation shall provide for and issue only such amount of bonds and stocks as may be necessary for such construction or purchase or for the improvement or equipment of the railroad and navigation lines constructed, established, or acquired, together with the proper cost of organizing and promoting the company and the amount of capital reasonably required in addition for working capital. No bonds or stocks shall be issued except for money paid or for property acquired at its actual cash value. The issuance of stock or bonds and the amount thereof shall in every case be subject to the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which shall grant full public hearings in relation thereto, and of such hearings public notice shall be given by or under the direction of the Commission. The United States shall be represented at such hearing by the Attorney-General or one of his assistants. The Commission shall certify in writing to the incorporators or to the corporation its determination, and shall record the same in its records, and all bonds and stock not issued in compliance with such determination shall be void as against such corporation.

CERTIFICATE OF INCORPORATION.

SEC. 4. That the original incorporators shall sign and acknowledge a certificate setting forth the following facts:

(a) The name of the company, which shall contain the words "National Railway Company," and which shall not be the same as that of any other corporation organized under this act or sufficiently similar thereto to cause confusion therewith.

(b) Nature of the business proposed to be engaged in.

(c) Duration of corporate existence.

(d) Principal place of business.

(e) Route of railway already built.
(f) Route of railway proposed to be built.
(g) The proposed amount of bonds and stock, which shall be determined as provided in section 3, and the respective amounts, conditions, and privileges of separate classes of stock if it is desired to have more than one class.
(h) The par value of the shares.
(i) The number of shares subscribed by each incorporator.

The said certificate, together with the engineer's report provided for under section 6 in cases where such report is required, shall be submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission, which shall direct such amendments therein or additions thereto as may be deemed necessary, and shall, when such certificate is in conformity to law and in other respects is approved by the Commission, indorse the approval of the Commission thereon, and record the said certificate, with such indorsement, and the day and hour of the submission of the approved certificate, in proper books kept by the Commission for such purpose. The corporate existence shall commence with such day and hour, and such record and a duly certified copy thereof shall be prima facie evidence of such corporate existence.

FINDING OF PUBLIC NECESSITY.

SEC. 5. That in case such certificate shall provide for the construction or establishment of new lines of railroad or navigation, the Commission, as a condition precedent to such corporate existence, and before approving such certificate, shall determine, after public hearing, whether public convenience and necessity require the building of such new lines, said determination and the method of arriving thereat to be in accordance with the rules established by said Commission. If such determination shall be to approve the construction aforesaid, it shall be recorded with said certificate of incorporation. If such certificate shall provide for the acquisition by purchase, lease, or otherwise, of any line already constructed or in course of construction, it shall be lawful for the Commission, after hearing, to deny the filing of such certificate if, in its judgment after public hearing, such acquisition would be detrimental to the public interest. But if the Commission shall approve such acquisition, as in the public interest, its determination shall in like manner be recorded with said certificate of incorporation.

The construction, extension, or acquisition of additions to any line or lines of railroad or navigation, or the acquisition of any other lines or part of lines or shares of stock in other companies as aforesaid, by any company incorporated under this act, is hereby prohibited unless and until such construction, extension, or acquisition shall receive the approval of the Commission, as of public necessity or in the public interest, upon application therefor duly filed and public hearing held; and any such approval shall be stated by the Commission in writing, with its reasons therefor, and recorded in its records.

ENGINEER'S REPORT.

SEC. 6. That no certificate of incorporation provided for in this act shall be filed or recorded unless the same is accompanied by the sworn report of one or more skillful engineers, showing, as far as practicable, the character, structure, grades, cost of duplication, cost of construction, and the manner of construction of the road or roads, line or lines, proposed to be built, established, or required, and containing statements in relation to such other matters as rules adopted by the Commission may require.

MEETING OF STOCKHOLDERS.

SEC. 7. That the Commission shall establish rules governing the first and other meetings of stockholders, notices thereof and quorums required thereat, the election of the board of directors, executive committee, president and other officers of the company, and for the adoption of by-laws. Such rules shall provide for not less than five nor more than fifteen directors, an executive committee of the board of directors, with managing powers, the election of a president, vice-president, treasurer, secretary, and such other officers as the by-laws shall require. The by-laws of the company shall not be effective until approved by the Commission, as in accordance with its rules. The Commission shall have authority to amend such rules from time to time as may, in its judgment, be required. The by-laws of the company shall provide for the removal of directors by vote representing two-thirds of the stock issued and outstanding at any annual or special meeting. Stock held in the company's treasury shall not be voted at any meeting.

STOCKS AND BONDS.

SEC. 8. That in case the entire stock shall not have been subscribed for prior to the filing of the certificate of incorporation, the directors shall open books of subscription to such stock in such manner as may be provided for by the rules of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Before issuing the bonds of such corporation the amount and time and term thereof and the rate of interest must be approved by said Commission. Before offering such bonds upon the general market they must be offered to the stockholders at not less than par, and thereafter such portion thereof as shall not be taken by the stockholders may be sold in the general market upon such notice as the Interstate Commerce Commission shall by rule prescribe.

CERTIFICATE OF ORGANIZATION.

SEC. 9. That when at least one-half of the capital stock shall have been subscribed for a majority of the directors shall make and swear to a certificate setting forth the following facts:
(a) Names and addresses of directors;
(b) Names and addresses of officers;
(c) Amount of capital stock subscribed for;
(d) Amount of capital stock paid for in other than cash, specifying separately and in detail the nature of such consideration and the total amount of stock separately allowed for other than cash;
(e) All delegated powers conferred by the by-laws on others than the board of directors;
(f) A complete and true copy of the by-laws of the corporation. And it shall be the duty of the board of directors, within thirty days after the passage of any vote, amendment, altering, repealing, or adding to the by-laws of the corporation, to file with the Interstate Commerce Commission a complete and true copy of such vote, amendment, alteration, repeal, or addition;
(g) Such certificate shall be submitted to the Commission, and after having been amended under the direction of the Commission to conform to the requirements of this section, if such amendment be necessary, the approval of the Commission shall be indorsed thereon, and the certificate, with its indorsement, shall be recorded in full in a proper book kept by said Commission for such purposes, together with the day and hour of the submission of the approved certificate, and said corporation may begin business on and after such time.

CAPITAL STOCK.

SEC. 10. That the par value of each share of stock shall be $100. No stockholder shall be liable for the debts of the corporation beyond the amount of his subscription to the capital stock, except as expressly provided in this act. Each stockholder shall be entitled to a certificate of stock, which shall evidence the amount of stock held by him. The stock shall be personal property; shall be transferable only on the books of the company, in such form as the by-laws may prescribe, and shall be subject to a lien in favor of the corporation for all debts due to said corporation from the owner of said stock. The stock may be sold for unpaid subscriptions in such manner as may be prescribed by the rules of the Commission. Each share of stock shall entitle the holder of record to one vote, and in voting for directors any stockholder may cast his vote or any part thereof for one candidate, so as to exercise the privilege of a cumulative vote. Votes may be cast by proxies, and the form of such proxies and the list of stockholders entitled to vote shall be prepared as provided by the by-laws in accordance with the rules of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Stockholders, by two-thirds vote of each class of stock, may create different classes of stock, either in the original or in subsequent issues, if the Interstate Commerce Commission shall find that the creation of such classes of stock is proper and necessary for the purposes of the corporation; and such stockholders may, by such vote, determine the preference, conditions, and privileges attaching to such classes, respectively, provided that preferred stock so issued, and any stock so issued other than common stock, shall have no voting powers.

BONDS.

SEC. 11. That the corporation may, by a majority vote of its stockholders, issue bonds, notes, or other evidence of indebtedness, but the total of all such obligations of the corporation shall be determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

MEETINGS, INCREASE OR DECREASE OF STOCK.

SEC. 12. That annual and special meetings of stockholders shall be held, notices thereof issued, and quorums required thereat, in such manner and form as provided by the by-laws, in accordance with the rules of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The stockholders shall have power to elect directors and by two-thirds vote to remove them; by majority vote to increase the issue of any class of stock, subject to the provisions of this act, and by such vote to decrease any class of stock, provided that no such decrease shall be valid as against creditors which shall render the corporation insolvent.

Stockholders may also by such vote of each class of stock make any alteration or amendment in the certificate of incorporation of the company not inconsistent with law which it would have been lawful to insert or omit or make in its original certificate of incorporation, such alteration or amendment to be subject to the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

REGULATION BY INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

SEC. 13. That all corporations organized under this act shall be subject to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof.

BOOKS AND RECORDS.

SEC. 14. That the treasurer shall keep proper books of account of all transactions of the corporation, and the secretary shall keep proper and full records of the transactions of all meetings of the stockholders, the board of directors, and the executive committee, and all of said books shall be open to the inspection of the Commission at any time, and also to the inspection of any stockholder at any reasonable time and place. It shall be the duty of the respective officers having charge of such books and records to permit upon demand, after ten days' previous notice, such inspection by a stockholder unless such right of inspection shall be enjoined as above provided.

REPORTS.

SEC. 15. That all corporations formed under this act shall make to the Interstate Commerce Commission such reports as are now by law required to be made to said Commission, and such further reports as the rules of said Commission shall from time to time require.

DISSOLUTION.

SEC. 16. That any such corporation may, after lawful private or public sale of the railway property and equipment, upon the vote of three-fourths of its capital stock, wind up and close its business and dissolve under such forms of procedure as to claims, distribution of assets, notice to creditors, publication of votes and certificates of dissolution, as may be prescribed by the rules of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

EMINENT DOMAIN.

SEC. 17. That any corporation organized under this act may acquire rights or property necessary for the proper execution of its corporate purposes, including right of way, sidings, terminals, depots, water rights, gravel, and stone. In case the corporation and the owner of such rights or property are unable to agree upon a price therefor and the same can not be acquired by agreement the corporation may proceed in any competent court in the State or Territory where such property is located for the condemnation of such rights or property. Such proceedings shall be conducted pursuant to the existing statutes of such State or Territory regarding the condemnation of property for public use.

TAXATION.

SEC. 18. That railroads and navigation lines owned by corporations duly organized under this act are hereby declared to be instrumentalities for the regulation of interstate and foreign commerce. The franchises, stocks, bonds, fixed evidences of indebtedness, operations and traffic, and the corporation itself shall not be subject to taxation by any State or Territory, but the physical property of such corporation situate in a State or Territory, including its right of way, its real estate, stations, office buildings, and equipment, shall be subject to assessment at such average percentage of their actual value as shall be customary with reference to other property in such State or Territory, and to the customary taxes on such assessment. In lieu of such tax any State or Territory may impose a tax not exceeding 4 per cent on such proportion of the gross receipts of such corporation as the number of miles of line in such State or Territory bear to the total miles of line operated by such corporation. In estimating the miles of line each mile of second track shall be regarded as equal to one-half mile of track, and each mile of third or fourth track shall be estimated as equal to one-third of each mile of main track. For the purposes of each State the Interstate Commerce Commission shall certify to the taxing authorities of each State or Territory the gross receipts for the preceding year, the total mileage as aforesaid, and the proportion of such total mileage operated in such State or Territory.

STATE POLICE AND STATE RATES.

SEC. 19. That nothing herein contained shall be construed as interfering with the police laws of any State regarding railroads incorporated under this act and operating in such States, nor shall anything herein contained be construed as affecting the right and power of each State to regulate purely State commerce on railroads organized under this act. But the Interstate Commerce Commission shall hold conferences from time to time with the regulating power of any State with a view to such harmonious adjustment and regulation of State commerce and interstate commerce as will protect the public against abuses or extortion, and the railroads against inadequate returns upon their investment, and as will promote the efficiency of such corporations as common carriers. With such end in view the said Commission shall call and hold at least once each year a conference with the railroad commissioners of the several States, and with such other State officers having any duty of supervision, taxation, or regulation of railroads within their respective States. Such conference shall be held in the District of Columbia, and the presiding officer at such conference shall be the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, or some other member of said Commission designated by its chairman. The proceedings of such conference shall be printed or distributed by or under the direction of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

ACQUISITION OF STATE RAILROADS.

SEC. 20. That such corporation may, with the consent of any State, upon the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, acquire the railroad of any corporation now organized under the laws of such State, and may issue for the purchase thereof such amount of bonds and stock as may be authorized by said Commission, but such authorization shall only be made after a full public hearing, at which the Attorney-General shall appear, either personally or by one of his assistants, and no issue of bonds or stock therefor shall exceed the value of such road as ascertained by said Commission.

With the consent of the State under which any railroad corporation is or may be organized, merger between the corporation owning such road and a corporation organized under this act may be accomplished under this act; and bonds and stock may be issued by any corporation organized under this act for such purpose, provided such proposed merger is approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the amount of the bonds issued, together with the rate of interest thereon, and of the stock issued in the accomplishment of such merger, are also approved by said Commission.

ACCIDENT AND INSURANCE FUND.

SEC. 21. That it shall be a condition of the grant and continuance of any franchise to do business under this act that the corporation holding such franchise shall set aside annually a percentage of the gross receipts of said corporation, not exceeding 1 per cent, to be held as a fund in the Treasury of the United States for the payment of pensions to the employees of such corporation who shall have been disqualified for active service, either by injury in the service or by age. The conditions entitling employees to pensions, the amount and time of payment, the investment of the fund, the disbursing of the same, and the entire management thereof shall be under rules and regulations to be made, and from time to time amended, by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

BOARD OF CONCILIATION.

SEC. 22. That the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby empowered and directed to act as a board of conciliation between corporations organized under this act and their employees as to any dispute arising between such corporation and their employees in the matter of compensation, hours, and conditions of labor, the protection of life and limb of said employees, and such power shall be exercised by said Commission in accordance with the rules and regulations to be made and from time to time altered by said Commission. All powers and duties now exercised by the chairman of said Commission and the Commissioner of Labor under the act entitled "An act concerning carriers engaged in interstate commerce and their employees," approved June 1, 1898, are hereby transferred to, vested in, and required of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

PENALTIES.

SEC. 23. That no corporation organized under this act shall make any expenditure whatever for the purpose of aiding or defeating any political party or candidate for office, and for every such offense such corporation shall be subject to a fine of ——— dollars.

Any officer, director, or agent of such corporation who shall willfully make, assist in making, cause or direct to be made, any false statement, material misrepresentation, or false entry in any book, report, return, account, or certificate required by or under this act to be kept, shall be, upon conviction, subject to a fine or not more than ——— dollars, or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both, and shall furthermore be liable in a civil action for damages caused to any creditor or stockholder thereby.

Any officer, director, or agent of such corporation who shall willfully refuse or neglect to perform any duty imposed upon him by this act, for which refusal or neglect a penalty is not herein otherwise expressly provided, shall be subject, upon conviction, to a fine of not more than ——— thousand dollars or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

Any corporation under this act which shall fail to conform to and comply with any of the requirements, or observe any of the prohibitions, in this act contained shall be subject, upon conviction, to a fine of not less than ——— dollars nor more than ——— dollars, and each day of the continuance of such failure shall be deemed a separate offense.

All fines collected under this act shall be paid into the accident and insurance fund herein provided.

DIVIDENDS.

SEC. 24. That no corporation organized under this act shall pay or distribute to its stockholders in any form, during any one year, a dividend or dividends exceeding in total amount 7 per cent upon its capital stock without the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission. If, after the payment by such corporation of its operating expenses, maintenance, improvements and betterments, its taxes, its interest on bond or on other indebtedness, and its contribution to the accident and insurance fund, there shall be a surplus over and above the amount necessary to pay such dividend of 7 per cent per annum, such surplus shall be reported to the Interstate Commerce Commission, which may direct the same to be applied, in whole or in part, to betterment of the road or equipment, or to extra dividends, or to a guaranty fund in the Treasury of the United States against future inadequacy of earnings or reduction in dividends, such fund to be controlled and invested under the direction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. In regulating such corporation, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have in view, so far as practicable, the maintenance of the par value of the stock of such corporation.

JURISDICTION OF SUITS BY AND AGAINST RAILWAY COMPANIES.

SEC. 25. That any corporation organized under this act shall, for the purpose of all actions by or against it, real, personal, or mixed, and all suits in equity, be deemed a citizen of every State in which its lines are located, and in such cases circuit and district courts of the United States shall not have jurisdiction other than such as they would have in cases between individual citizens of the same State. The provisions of this section shall not be held to affect the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States in cases by the United States, or by direction of an officer therein, or cases for winding up the affairs of any such corporation.

Any case involving the recovery of fines or penalties under this act may be brought in the circuit court of the United States for any judicial district wherein the corporation has its principal office or through which the line or any part thereof may run. In every such case, for the purposes thereof, the jurisdiction of the court shall be coextensive with the territory of the United States, and its writs of subpœna, removal of persons, execution, and all other process shall run throughout the United States. All existing laws pertaining to the taking and compelling of testimony in cases arising under the act to regulate commerce, or its amendments, shall apply in cases arising under this act.

APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVER AND ANNULMENT OF CHARTER.

SEC. 26. That in case the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have reason to believe that any corporation organized under this act has been guilty of the violation of any of its provisions, or of said act to regulate commerce and the acts amendatory thereof, said Commission may apply to any circuit court of the United States through whose jurisdiction any part of the railroad operated by said corporation shall run for the appointment of a receiver by said court for said corporation; and such circuit court shall have power to appoint such receiver in case said court shall find said corporation so guilty of a violation of this act, and shall make such orders and continue said receivership for such time as in the opinion of the court will best prevent the continuation of such violation; and any such circuit court shall have power upon application by the Interstate Commerce Commission to annul and revoke the charter of any corporation organized under this act for continued violation of the terms of said act.

RULES.

SEC. 27. That the Interstate Commerce Commission shall make and from time to time alter, amend, or repeal rules necessary for the complete enforcement of the provisions of this act.

AMENDMENT OR REPEAL.

SEC. 28. That this act and all franchises required under it shall be at all times subject to amendment, alteration, or repeal by act of Congress.

Mr. NEWLANDS. In conclusion, Mr. President, I trust that we will all take a broad and comprehensive view, not only of the plans relating to the development of our inland waterways, but of the plans relating to the development of our foreign transportation and of the plans relating to our railroad transportation. We can only make our powers efficient in the interest of the common good by the full exercise of this important power granted by the people to the nation—the union of States, the power to regulate commerce between the States and with foreign nations.

If we will only exercise this power fully, comprehensively, and wisely, both as to the development of our national highways and waterways and as to the creation of the public servants that are to operate them, we can build up such machinery for the development of our domestic and foreign commerce as the world has never known.

I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Nevada, the bill will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

APPENDIX A.

[From The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, January, 1908.]

THE USE AND DEVELOPMENT OF AMERICAN WATERWAYS.

By Senator FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS,

Vice-Chairman of the Inland Waterways Commission.

The Inland Waterways Commission is the outgrowth of an agitation which has been conducted for some time, particularly in the Mississippi Valley, for the improvement of our waterways. The President was urged to exercise his constitutional power of making recommendations to Congress, and, pursuing his usual method of first exhausting investigation, appointed an executive commission with a view to gathering into one body a number of men who, either in legislative or in administrative work, had acquired experience in the problems relating to the waterways of the country.

APPOINTMENT OF THE COMMISSION.

As chairman of this Commission the President selected Hon. THEODORE E. BURTON, of Ohio, who, as chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives, had discharged the duties of that important position with rare intelligence, thoroughness, and public spirit. He also appointed two United States Senators, Hon. WILLIAM WARNER, of Missouri, and the writer; another Member of the House of Representatives, Hon. JOHN H. BANKHEAD, of Alabama (the leading minority member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House), who has since become a Senator; and five members of the Executive Department of the Government. These scientific members are: General Alexander Mackenzie, Chief of the Engineer Corps of the Army; Dr. W J McGee, a scientist and soil expert, connected with the Bureau of Soils in the Department of Agriculture; Mr. Frederick H. Newell, Chief of the Reclamation Service; Mr. Gifford Pinchot, Chief of the Bureau of Forestry, and Mr. Herbert Knox Smith, Chief of the Bureau of Corporations. The President reserved the right of adding to the Commission in the future certain transportation experts, and it is possible that the Commission may, before its work is completed, take up in the broadest way the whole question of transportation.

PURPOSE OF ITS APPOINTMENT.

The duty imposed upon this Commission was to investigate the use of water, not only for navigation, but also for all other purposes, with a view to recommending to the President a full and comprehensive plan for the development and utilization of all the natural resources of the country relating to water. Its primary purpose was to facilitate water transportation, upon which the prosperity of the country so largely depends. We have been for some time engaged in the consideration of questions relating to railways, and we are now about to enter upon the related question of waterways.

WORK PERFORMED BY THE COMMISSION.

Since its appointment the Commission has been hard at work upon the problems assigned to it. An organization was effected in Washington on April 29, 1907. Early in May the Commission took a trip down the Mississippi River from St. Louis to the Gulf and studied the problems of the lower part of that river. In September a part of the Commission visited the Pacific coast and inspected the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers, in California, and the Columbia River, in the Northwest. Beginning September 21, the entire body started on a tour of the Great Lakes, embarking at Cleveland and ending at Duluth. Passing from Duluth to St. Paul by rail, the journey was resumed down that river on board a Government boat and continued to Memphis, the President joining the party at Keokuk. After the Memphis convention most of the members of the Commission proceeded to Kansas City, and from that place made a tour of inspection down the Missouri River to its mouth. In these various tours, covering thousands of miles, daily meetings were held, at which Government engineers and other experts were examined and much testimony taken relative to the conditions and needs of the rivers.

Besides attending the convention at Memphis, the Commission was also represented at the Irrigation Congress at Sacramento, Cal.; the Trans-Mississippi Congress at Muscogee; the Upper Mississippi Convention at Moline, Ill.; at the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Conference, in Philadelphia, late in November; the recent congress of the National Drainage Association in Baltimore; and the National Rivers and Harbors Congress in Washington, which closed a few days ago. On November 25 the Commission again convened in Washington and has ever since been busy considering its recommendations. The President in his message to the first session of the Sixtieth Congress stated that he would transmit his recommendations regarding the waterways to Congress after receiving the report of the Commission. The work thus far performed is highly instructive and important, but until the report is formulated and made public what I shall say upon the subject must be regarded as only the expression of my individual views.

IMPORTANCE OF THE SUBJECT.

The transportation question is the most important question of the day, and the reason that it has suddenly (and somewhat unexpectedly to many of us) become of such pressing importance just at this time is because the railway service of the country has practically broken down. Whilst the railway development of the country has astonished the world, and whilst we have to-day more than half the railway mileage of the world, yet that machinery has proven inadequate to meet the demands of the production of the country. Years ago the railways were competing with the waterways and practically drove them out of business; but the efforts of the railways to monopolize the carriage of cheap natural products, carried in other countries by water, has resulted in congestion of traffic and a virtual breaking down of the entire transportation system, and it is essential that we shall take immediate steps to supplement our railway system by a complete system of waterway transportation. Everywhere else in the world water transportation is an important factor in both domestic and foreign commerce. Germany has, perhaps, the most perfect system of transportation in the world. Her rivers have been artificialized from source to mouth and they are supplemented by a system of canal, rail, and ocean transportation which, combined, give that country a transportation machinery unequaled anywhere in the development of domestic and foreign commerce.

However much we may rely upon the railways for quick transportation of persons and of products, it is clear that the rivers should also be used; that they should be properly artificialized; that their beds should be made stable and their courses sure for the transportation of bulky merchandise. This class of traffic has too long occupied too large a proportion of the available capacity of the railroads, to the detriment of other more valuable products and even to the injury of life and limb. Even the great railway managers—such men as Mr. Hill, Mr. Harrahan, Mr. Finley, and others—are urging the development of the inland waterways as supplementary to the railways. Only a few years ago Mr. Hill is said to have declared that water competition could not exist, and that if he were given the money with which to build a double-track railway beside the proposed enlarged Erie Canal he would turn the canal into a lily pond. It will be remembered, also, that with regard to the Mississippi River he declared it could never be made an efficient instrument of commerce until its bottom had been lathed and plastered. But the views of these men are changing, and changing because they realize that their railways have been overtaxed, and that they must either expend vast sums of money in their improvement or call in the aid of the waterways. Mr. Hill estimates that it will cost, within the next five years, I believe, five and one-half billion dollars to put the railroads in condition to meet the requirements of the country's traffic. This does not appear to be an overestimate when we remember that the railroads of the country to-day are capitalized at about fifteen billion dollars, and that there is little double track, although every railroad in the country ought to be double tracked.

A COMPREHENSIVE PLAN NECESSARY.

I assume that the country will not be disposed to enter upon the work of improving the inland waterways unless a plan is presented which will fairly meet the requirements of the whole country. The movement represents a policy, not a project. It seems improbable that any particular river, such as the Mississippi, will be fastened upon and pushed forward without some assurance that all the other rivers which require improvement will also be taken up under a comprehensive plan, one involving, ultimately, the highest possible development of all the waterways of the country. It was doubtless with this thought in mind that the President appointed the Commission, and it was doubtless with a view to the formulation of such a plan that he called in the members connected with the Reclamation Service, the Forestry Service, the Expert on Soils, and the Chief Engineer of the Army. There is practically no difference of opinion, I apprehend, as to the desirability of improving the inland waterways of the country. The public attention is arrested, and I never knew the people to be more interested or united. The important thing now is to give effective direction to this aroused public sentiment by explaining the true scope of the subject and the importance of scientific legislation for carrying out the comprehensive plans which alone will make the undertaking successful. It is possible that the whole question will not be solved for some time, for the reason that Congress rarely takes the initiative; it follows public opinion rather than leads it. It is fortunate, therefore, that these questions are now being discussed in the various conventions and conferences held throughout the country, and it is important that every man who has a thought of value upon the subject should express it.

SCOPE OF THE WORK.

It is impossible to enter, with hope of success, upon comprehensive plans for the improvement of our inland waterways without taking into consideration the related questions of forest preservation and restoration, of the irrigation of arid lands, of the reclamation of swamp lands, of bank protection, of clarification of streams, and other kindred matters.

It is necessary to preserve the forests of the country from the destruction which threatens them, not only because our timber supply is diminishing, but because forests are natural conservators of moisture and aid in the gradual distribution of the waters to the streams and rivers that flow into the lakes and the ocean. When an area of land is denuded of its forests, the waters falling upon it rush off in torrential streams, causing destructive floods and soil waste; but the forest absorbs moisture like a sponge and gives it out gradually to the springs and streams through the season of drought, thus aiding in the maintenance of a stable channel.

So also with the question of the irrigation of the arid lands on the headwaters of our inland rivers. The cultivation of the vast areas on the upper reaches of the western tributaries of the Mississippi involves the construction of great reservoirs for the storage of water, which is caught while the snows are melting and later on let out through canals upon the plains to meet the demands of the growing crops. These fertile plains drink up the moisture and become themselves great storage basins which return the water by seepage at the time when it it is most needed for the maintenance of a channel in the navigable rivers below.

Thus, both forestry and irrigation are essential to the prevention of floods and of soil waste and to the maintenance of a stable channel for navigation, to say nothing of the vast money value or the great sum of human happiness involved in the possession of great forests and vast areas of productive irrigated plains. For the purposes of navigation it is of the very highest importance that there should be a stable channel, one of standard depth; not a variable channel, 40 feet deep at one time and 1 foot at another; not a channel deep in one place and shallow in others, owing to the interposition of shoals and quicksands; but one of standard depth, which will accommodate vessels of standard draft, just as there is a standard gauge for railroads. Anything which will retard the flow of the water during the period of flood and make it available in time of drought will, of course, increase the stability of the channel. And thus it is that the questions of forestry and irrigation become of first importance in connection with the problem of the inland waterways.

Few of us realize as we ought that the soil of our continent is being washed away and that the bottoms of the navigable rivers themselves are drifting slowly into the Gulf and the ocean. The trouble with the passes at the mouth of the Mississippi is that a great delta has been built up there, like the delta upon which the city of New Orleans stands, where there is now a depth of 1,200 feet of alluvial soil which has been deposited by that river. It is not impossible that, in time, the Gulf might be turned into a continent by this process.

Closely related to the prevention of soil waste is the matter of the clarification of streams; for every grain of sand in these rivers is a tool of destruction when directed against the river's banks, while clear water cuts the banks but little. The Yellowstone, as its name indicates, is pouring into the Missouri immense volumes of sand, and the Missouri is pouring into the Mississippi vast quantities of alluvial deposits, every grain of which is both a tool for the destruction of the banks and an obstruction to navigation when deposited in shoals and sandbars. The rivers are also the sources of water supply for domestic purposes to cities and towns and must be purified and made fit for consumption and kept clear of the filth and sewage of cities.

The reclamation of swamp lands must also be considered. Their reclamation means not only the addition of large and fertile areas to the productive resources of the country, but also the control of the streams themselves. These lowlands lie at the foot of the rivers, whose waters naturally spread out wastefully in swamps and bayous. The channels fill up and become shallow because there is no current to carry away the sediment; but when confined in comparatively narrow channels by means of levees the water is thereby raised to a higher level and its current is quickened and becomes an efficient power for carrying away the sediment and scouring the bottoms of the rivers, and thus creating a channel of sufficient depth for the purposes of navigation. So that we have also inseparably connected with the question of navigation the related questions of swamp-land reclamation and bank protection.

All these uses of water are important; it is difficult to say which is the most important. But, assuming that the transportation of products is as important as their production, it is clear that for the proper development of our inland waterways we must embrace in one comprehensive plan the treatment of our forests, the irrigation of arid lands, the reclamation of swamp lands, and other related matters. In doing this, vast water power can be developed, and this power must be saved from the control of trusts and monopolies and care taken to direct its use in the interest of the entire people. It is estimated that, on many of our navigable rivers, the power which can be developed in this way will be sufficient to pay the entire cost of the improvement of the streams.

CAN THE WATERWAYS BE RESTORED?

The outline which has been given, based upon the requirements of the Mississippi River, is merely an illustration of what is required on the Pacific coast rivers and, in less degree, on the rivers of the Gulf and the Atlantic coast. The business question before us is whether we can restore these waterways as a part of the efficient machinery for the country's transportation. Many doubt it, and I must confess that when I went down the Mississippi last summer and traveled for miles without seeing a single boat, I was inclined to doubt it also. There were a few towboats, but the river towns were neglected, the wharves rotting, and the river fronts largely occupied by the tracks of the railroads, whose trains of cars, running at frequent intervals along the banks, showed how thoroughly they had absorbed the commerce of the region.

These conditions seemed to be due to two causes—the terrific competition of the railroads, which have made a practice of underbidding the waterways during the navigation season and afterwards raising their rates, and also to the failure of the Government to provide and maintain a stable navigation channel. I am also of opinion that the railroads have been somewhat influential in obstructing legislation for the improvement of our waterways, and I believe they now see that this was a mistaken policy.

I have no doubt, myself, about the policy of restoring the commerce of our inland waterways, but I think it is likely to be a difficult task. One difficulty will be in providing facilities for assembling and distributing the products to be carried on the rivers. The terminal facilities at the towns on the rivers are now very poor, when they are not entirely in the hands of the railroads, and terminal facilities mean little in themselves unless the connecting lines of railroad are able and willing to take goods from the waterways and distribute them in the interior. The railroads have, as one of the chief elements of their strategic strength, the ability to assemble commerce in every part of the country and to carry it on cars of standard gauge to any other part of the country; whereas the river carriers are, at present, circumscribed in their efforts by the limits of the rivers themselves.

It is therefore necessary that the railroads shall be brought into the most intimate relations with the river carriers, so that the one system will supplement and aid, not injure, the other. We must broaden the area for water transportation, also, so that it can live, if necessary, upon the trade of the towns accessible by boat. The Ohio can be connected by canal with Lake Erie, the Mississippi with Lake Michigan, and so on, and we can connect the entire Mississippi Valley, the Gulf coast, and the Atlantic coast with each other by a system of sheltered waterways along the Gulf and Atlantic coasts, such as was so ably discussed at the Philadelphia conference, consisting of bays, sounds, and rivers to be connected with each other by canals such as the contemplated canal across Florida connecting the Gulf with the Atlantic coast, the canal connecting the Carolina sounds with Chesapeake Bay, the canal connecting Chesapeake Bay with the Delaware River, the canal connecting the Delaware River with the Raritan, and the canal across Cape Cod—thus giving a sheltered waterway from the mouth of the Mississippi to Maine, upon which it is possible that boats of standard draft could pass from Boston down the Atlantic coast across Florida to the Gulf coast and up the Mississippi River to the Great Lakes. If these things were done and warfare between the railways and the waterways should continue, there would still be sufficient transportation without the distributing aid of the railways to constitute a very influential part of the commerce of the country.

But it will scarcely do to predicate the improvement of our waterways upon the continuance of this antagonism. A few weeks ago I was quoted in certain Ohio newspapers as saying that the appointment of the Inland Waterways Commission was a part of the "big stick" policy of the President. Besides the fact that I never made such a statement, I believe the contrary to be the fact, and that the President, like the Commission, is working for greater harmony—not to stir up antagonism between the different transportation systems of the country. My own view is that the waterway system ought to be largely supplemental to the railway system and that it may possibly become necessary, in the event of continued hostility on the part of the railways toward the waterways, to enforce a liberal system of interchange of traffic and use of facilities between the two.

Viewing transportation in the large, it is of the highest importance that its machinery should be so adjusted that the common carrier can make the best and cheapest possible use, in the interest of the public, of all the public highways—of river, of railway, and of ocean. A perfect system of transportation would involve but one control from shipper to consignee, and our aim should be a system that will create great corporate carriers, under proper regulation and control, owning railway lines from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf, owning steamboat lines on the rivers and lakes wherever practicable and economical, and also owning great lines of ocean steamers, so that rates can be made and goods be carried from any point in this country to any other point in this country or to a foreign country under a single control and at a single rate, and that rate the lowest one consistent with good service and reasonable profit.

LEGISLATIVE REQUIREMENTS.

Having said this much upon the physical requirements of the problem, let us consider what legislation is necessary in order to carry the undertaking into effect. And here the greatest difference of opinion is likely to exist, for while the country is practically united as to the necessity of undertaking the work, the machinery for setting it in motion has not been carefully considered and already there is divided counsel. It has been thought in the past that our Government was incapable of engaging successfully in any great constructive work. This belief has been entirely disproved by the great works begun and continued under the direction of the Reclamation Service and the Panama Canal Service. In the legislation inaugurated for these public works Congress very wisely gave a free hand to the Executive, with the result that by a process of evolution a great administrative organization has been built up in each service that has been conducted on thoroughly businesslike principles. In a bill which I have recently introduced in the Senate (Senate bill 500) I have endeavored to follow that beneficent legislation by putting the whole responsibility for the development of the waterways of the country upon the Executive, whoever he may be, conscious that we will never have a dishonest Executive and that his highest pride will be to carry out successfully and economically the great charge intrusted to him. To put the Executive in a legislative straitjacket would be sure to result in inefficiency and failure.

INLAND WATERWAYS FUND.

The most important feature of this bill is the creation of an inland waterways fund, to be used both for investigation and construction. The sum of $50,000,000 is by the bill reserved and set aside as such fund, and the President is authorized, whenever the fund is reduced below $20,000,000, to make up the deficiency by issuing and selling bonds up to the amount of $50,000,000. Thus the fund is always kept full, even though Congress should fail to make appropriations. The President is authorized to have examinations and surveys made for the development of the inland waterways of the country and for the connection of such rivers with each other, or with the Great Lakes, by connecting and by coastal canals. In order to enable the President to make such examination and to enter upon works found to be practicable, he is authorized to appoint an inland waterways commission, and to bring in coordination therewith the scientific services of the country, such as the Corps of Engineers of the Army, the Bureau of Soils, the Forest Service, the Reclamation Service, and the Bureau of Corporations; and to appoint such experts and boards in connection therewith as he shall deem advisable; and to fix their salaries until the same are fixed by Congress. The Commission is required to make reports to the President and to Congress, or to either body of Congress, whenever information is required.

CONSTRUCTION.

The next question is as to construction. Under this bill, the President is authorized, whenever a project is determined by the Commission to be feasible, to enter upon the immediate construction of the works and to let contracts for the execution of the same, in whole or in part; the only limit upon his power being that the necessary money for the payment of the contracts must be in the waterway fund when any such contracts are let.

It will be observed that the initiative, both as to examination and as to actual construction, is put in the hands of the Executive Department as an administrative matter. It is clear that the judgment of a board of experts will be very much better than that of Congress upon such matters, and that much delay and confusion will be saved by authorizing the prompt initiation of the work. Otherwise, we shall have difference of view, both in committees and in Congress itself, as to the details of the work, as to the relative importance of the projects, and sectional differences will arise, only to be compromised by concessions harmful to this great movement. Congress should exercise the fullest power of examination and of criticism, and, of course, it has the power at any time to change the organization or to stop the work. All these powers should be exercised whenever wise and necessary; but the main purpose of the bill is to enter upon the work in a businesslike way, just as a private corporation would do, and not to impair its proper administration by unnecessary legislative restraints, or by the breaks and interruptions in the continuity of the work which have proven so disastrous heretofore when Congress has failed to continue to make the necessary appropriations.

The bill also provides for cooperation with States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals with reference to such collateral works as have been suggested, and for an equitable distribution of the costs and benefits. Wherever practicable, compensation to the fund is to be secured by the conveyance of reclamation rights, the lease of water power, and such other means as may be beneficial to the States, municipalities, communities, corporations, or individuals affected. Equitable apportionment of the work among the several waterways systems of the country is also enjoined by the bill. It is intended that work shall be commenced contemporaneously among the different systems of the country, so that no section may feel that another section is being favored at its expense. The bill is tentative in its nature and designed to provoke discussion and to aid in the framing of a more perfect measure.

AFTER CONSTRUCTION, WHAT?

After these waterways are developed they must, of course, be freely used by the people; but their use will necessarily involve the creation of common carriers under laws either national or State. The business of common carriers is not, in these days, engaged in by individuals; the creation of artificial beings called corporations is necessary for this purpose. It is clear that the transportation of these waterway carriers will be interstate and foreign, and therefore subject to national regulation and control. The nation should itself create these corporations, and it should supervise their capitalization, control their profits, and make them the obedient servants of the people. At the same time it should protect them against the destructive competition of the railways. The nation ought not to allow one public servant (the railway company) to destroy another public servant (the steamboat company), both engaged in conducting transportation on the public highways of the country. It might, in order to encourage the operations of the waterway companies, exempt them for a period, as national instrumentalities, from taxation either national or State. These questions should be taken hold of at the start with a strong hand, and the organization of the water carriers should not be left to the laws of the different States. We should not drift into confusion on this subject as we have regarding our railways.

NATIONAL INCORPORATION OF CARRIERS.

The demand for national action as to water transportation will lead to national action regarding rail transportation and finally necessitate the creation by the nation of the corporations which are to handle both classes of traffic. We must begin to realize that three-fourths of the transportation of the country is now interstate; that our railroad systems are being operated regardless of State lines; that regulation by the individual States operating here and there on the sections of these great systems lying within their boundaries is disjointed, illusive, and illogical; that complexity, confusion, and insecurity, both to investors and shippers, are the results of the present system.

The truth is, we have not yet begun to think or act scientifically on this subject, but have allowed ourselves to drift, and the present railway system in this country may be called an accidental growth. The first railroads were built from a point in one State to another point in the same State, and their commerce was at first purely State commerce; but the railroad corporations, at first organized for the transportation of State commerce, gradually developed into great interstate systems, composed of many railroads combined under the laws of a single State, and that, oftentimes, a State entirely foreign to the region in which the system operates. In this way 6,000 railroad companies gradually came into existence, of which less than 2,000 are now operating roads, the others having been merged into them, and of these 2,000 almost the entire mileage—at least 170,000 out of a total of 220,000 miles—is merged in eight or ten great systems, each controlling from ten to fifteen thousand miles of track and operating in from ten to fifteen different States. So that the growth which began as a purely State growth became, by a process of evolution, a national growth, and it is no longer a question whether the railroads shall be nationalized, for they long ago nationalized themselves, but merely a question whether we shall continue to permit the lesser sovereignties to assume the function which the nation has neglected of creating its own agents for the transportation of interstate and foreign commerce.

THE NATIONAL POWERS.

We can not take the broad view of the powers of the National Government as relating to waterways and carriers by water and refuse to recognize those powers as relating to railways and carriers by rail. It is curious how united public sentiment is as to the national control of the waterways and how divided it seems to be as to a similar control of the railways.

We have now forty-six sovereign States, each absolutely sovereign in all matters of local legislation, and each absolutely subject to another sovereign, the union of the States, as to all matters intrusted by the Constitution of that union. The main purposes of creating this sovereignty called the "United States," were two—the national defense, and the regulation of interstate and foreign commerce. The regulation of interstate and foreign commerce involves necessarily the selection of the instrumentalities of that commerce, and necessarily, also, the selection of the public servants that are to engage in such transportation. The nation should itself create the great corporations which are to engage in interstate transportation, by both water and rail. The reason the nation should frame the incorporation act under which great mergers are to be made is that we must prevent overcapitalization and we must limit their profits. If the nation is to permit a State to create the public agents which are to do the nation's business, it should control the legislation of that State; and that, of course, is neither desirable nor possible.

The purpose of the Constitution was not to centralize government, but to unionize government, where the general welfare was affected. We unionized the quarantine, because we realized that disease had no respect for State lines; we unionized irrigation, because nature failed to place the rivers entirely within State boundaries; we unionized banking, because the interest of the entire people required one money, a common denominator acceptable everywhere, and a system of exchange inviting universal confidence. And all the reasons which led to the unionizing of these functions of government in the past exist in far greater and stronger degree, at this time, with reference to the unionizing of the subject of transportation. We have just reached the threshold of this great question, and it is very important that we shall start right by the nation creating its own public agents, and not permitting an inferior sovereignty to do so.

MERGERS NECESSARY.

We should drop excitement, reprisal, and retaliation, and get down to the question whether these mergers shall be broken up and resolved into their original elements of purely State railroads, or whether consolidation, properly controlled, shall be permitted. I think all thoughtful men will agree that the mergers of the railways are necessary to the proper development of the transportation system of the country, and that the fullest powers of combination should be exercised, under proper restraint as to capitalization, rates, and profits. To break up these mergers and resolve them into their integral parts, bounded and circumscribed in their operations by State lines, would be a national calamity—if it could be done—as grievous to the public as to the railroads. Leaving out of consideration for the present, the combination of competing lines, these mergers have been of immense service to the country, although the machinery for bringing them about has been most complicated. The thing complained of is not the fact of combination, but the methods of combination, unrestrained by adequate laws and fruitful of overcapitalization, frauds on stockholders, and frauds on shippers.

It is a universal experience that whenever the laws of a country do not meet its economic requirements the people will violate the laws or evade them. That is what has occurred in the case of the railroads. The ingenuity of all the corporation lawyers of the country has been exercised in order to promote the combination of single roads into systems. Although these combinations were absolutely essential to the best development of the country, the railroads were obliged, in order to accomplish them, to evade the laws. This is as much responsible for the spirit of lawlessness in the management of the transportation interests of the country as any other one thing; and I am sure that, if this condition exists (and I fear we must all admit that it does), we, the lawmakers, can not escape our share of responsibility.

The railway is merely the agent of the Government—the agent of the State as to purely State commerce and the agent of the nation as to interstate and foreign commerce—and the Government has the power to fix the compensation, in the shape of rates on freight or the rate of dividend which the agent shall receive on his investment. It can fix this compensation in the form of tolls, or it can fix it in gross, and all that it must avoid is legislation of a confiscatory nature. I think, therefore, the reasoning is conclusive that, inasmuch as the State can legislate only for State commerce, it can not legislate and ought not to attempt to legislate upon this great question of merger, which is only entered upon for the purpose of promoting interstate and foreign commerce; but that this can only be wisely accomplished by the action of the Congress of the United States, in which every State in the Union is represented, and in the election of which every citizen has a voice and vote.

I am more and more impressed with the importance of the whole problem and with the necessity of preparing a broad and comprehensive plan for the improvement of our waterways and also for their coordination with the railway system of the country. Such a system of waterways, involving ultimately the highest development of forestry, of irrigation, of swamp-land reclamation, of clarification of streams, and of bank protection as efficient means of maintaining a channel for navigation, would relieve vastly the existing congestion of transportation. The perfection of the transportation system of the country will, in my judgment, involve the creation by the nation of common carriers which will own not only great trunk lines of railway, but also lines of steamers on the lakes, the rivers, and the ocean. Combination is an essential part of the economic development of transportation. A perfect system involves, as far as possible, one control from shipper to consignee, and this can only be accomplished by great transportation lines operating regardless of State or national boundaries, which will utilize the railways, the rivers, and the ocean by methods of carriage adapted to each.

A COMPREHENSIVE MEASURE.

It is with such considerations in view, and for the purpose of effectually coordinating the transportation interests of the country, both waterway and railway, that I have introduced in the present Congress another measure known as Senate bill No. 490. In framing this act I have not urged the national incorporation of all railways, many of which lie entirely within the boundaries of a single State, but confine it simply to the construction of interstate railroads and to the combination of interstate railroads already constructed into great systems. As to existing roads, this can only be done with the acquiescence of the States. Some States might attempt to withhold their consent, but they would, in my opinion, soon yield when they found themselves outstripped by their more obliging neighbors. There are other ways of proceeding, but I should prefer persuasion to anything savoring of force; and when I speak of force, I do not, of course, mean actual coercion or the violation of the sovereignty of any State, but the prevention, for instance, of any corporation not under national charter from engaging in interstate transportation—a course unquestionably within the power of the nation.

The bill provides for the incorporation under national law of carriers, whether by rail or by water, engaged in interstate and foreign transportation, with a provision for the acquisition, with the consent of the State affected, of State-incorporated roads now in existence. The Interstate Commerce Commission is given full control over the capitalization, rates, dividends, and other incidents of the operation of such corporations. When promoters desire to construct a new line of interstate railroad, or to combine old lines into one system, they will be brought before this body of the highest intelligence, character, and efficiency and present their plan; the amount of bonds they are to issue and the rate of interest, the amount of preferred stock and the rate of interest, the amount of common stock and the rate of interest, and the expenses of promotion; and, upon the approval of the Commission, the consent of the nation will have been given only after the most careful scrutiny and consideration and the genuineness of the whole transaction viséed by the Government itself.

The bill also lays down a uniform method of taxation by the States, and 1 per cent of the gross receipts is set aside annually as a special fund in the Treasury of the United States for an insurance fund to the employees of the railroads against accident and disability. Dividends in any one year are limited to 7 per cent, except with the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and any surplus goes to the betterment of the roads, to the insurance fund, or to a guaranty fund against future inadequacy of earnings, or to extra dividends, if the Commission consents. In fixing rates and dividends, the Interstate Commerce Commission are directed to have regard, as far as possible, to the maintenance of the par value of the stock. There is a provision for the Interstate Commerce Commission to act as a board of conciliation in the settlement of disputes between the railroads and their employees on questions of hours and of conditions and compensation of labor. It is stipulated that there shall be no interference with the local police regulations of the States or with their regulation of purely State traffic or with the jurisdiction of the State courts.

We welcome, therefore, the national consideration of all these questions relating to the inland waterways because it opens up the greater question of transportation regardless of State lines by both rail and water, and because its very consideration will bring about a fuller exercise of the granted powers of the Constitution. It seems to me peculiarly fortunate that this question of the improvement of the inland waterways has come up and arrested public attention as it has done, because once public opinion is created, legislation will speedily follow. The whole question of transportation in all its branches will be opened up and intelligently discussed, and we may be able to incorporate in our legislation regarding the waterways some much-needed legislation relating to the national incorporation of carriers, whether by water or rail or both, and thus weaken the opposition of those who would prevent the coordination of the whole matter comprehensively by indicating to them that the national powers regarding interstate and foreign transportation will not be exercised piecemeal or with reference to the one class of transportation and not with reference to the other.

If a proper system were created, most of the evils now complained of would disappear. A system of transportation could be easily devised which would enlist the best powers of the National Government without infringing at all upon the powers of the States—one which would protect alike the railway investor, the railway employee, the shipper, and the public in their respective rights and at the same time protect the States in all their legitimate powers and change the hostility of the railways toward the waterways into friendliness and cooperation in the interest of the entire people.

APPENDIX B.

THE CONSTRUCTIVE WORKS OF THE NATION.

The value of administering large Government affairs on a business basis is strongly exemplified in some of the most important and successful services of the Government, whose work, like that of the proposed Inland Waterways Commission, has to do with the conservation of the nation's natural resources.

Forest Service.—The growth and present efficiency of the Forest Service is due in a large measure to the business methods under which it was permitted to start and perfect its present organization. At the end of the present fiscal year, as the result of good management, the Service will probably turn back into the Treasury of the United States $2,000,000. It was enabled to do this under the act of Congress of February 1, 1905, section 5, which provided—

> That all money received from the sale of any products or the use of any land or resources of said forest reserves shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States, and for a period of five years from the passage of this act shall constitute a special fund, available until expended as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, for the protection, administration, improvement, and extension of Federal forest reserves.

Under this provision the national forests became more than standing timber "reserves." Trails were opened, roads were built, communication was established, and homesteaders were encouraged and protected. In short, a general system was established which gradually brought the administration up to the standing it holds to-day. It was made possible by making those in executive charge responsible and giving them a free hand, to develop the permanent value of the forests as useful resources and to do away with the opposition based on the belief that the preservation of a forest prevented its use.

Reclamation Service.—The reclamation act, passed in 1902, provides that the receipts from the sales of public lands in thirteen States and three Territories shall be set aside in a reclamation fund for use in the reclamation of arid lands. Each project is self-compensatory by the sale of water rights to settlers, to be paid for in ten annual installments. This fund is constantly replenished and used over again.

The Reclamation Service has dug 1,815 miles of canal. Some of these canals carry whole rivers, like the Truckee River in Nevada and the North Platte in Wyoming. It has constructed 56 tunnels; has erected 215 large structures, including the great dams in Nevada and the Minnedoka dam in Idaho, 80 feet high and 650 feet long; has completed 670 headworks, flumes, etc.; has built 611 miles of wagon road in mountainous country; has erected and in operation 830 miles of telephone, and has manufactured 80,000 barrels of cement. To-day the Service owns and has at work 1,500 horses and mules. It operates 9 locomotives, 611 cars, 23 miles of railway, 84 gasoline engines, and 70 steam engines. It has constructed and is operating 5 electric-light plants. It has excavated over 33,000,000 cubic yards of earth and nearly 5,000,000 cubic yards of rock. Its employees in the classified and registered service, including the Washington office, number 1,126. The laborers employed directly by the Government number 4,448. The laborers employed by contractors number over 10,000. The expenditures now total nearly $1,000,000 per month. As a result of the operations of the Reclamation Service, 8 new towns have been established, 100 miles of branch railroads have been constructed, and 14,000 people have already taken up their residence in the desert.

Panama Canal service.—The Spooner Act, passed in June, 1902, provided for a commission of seven members, at least four of whom should be engineers, with at least one an officer of the Army and one an officer of the Navy. Three commissions were organized under this act—one known as the Walker Commission, one known as the Shonts Commission, and another as the Goethals Commission. Full power was given the President to proceed with the work and to issue bonds therefor, up to the extent of $130,000,000. The only limitation on the President's power was the creation of a commission of seven members, through which he was to act. Subsequent experience has shown that it would probably have been better had the number of commissioners been left to the discretion of the President, although as now organized practically the same result has been accomplished, as all the commissioners are required to live on the Isthmus and each one has a distinct department of duty assigned by the President. The Commission controls the Panama Railroad, all of the Commissioners being directors. Of this Commission, Lieutenant-Colonel Goethals is chairman and chief engineer, Major Gaillard is head of the department of excavation and dredging, Major Sibert is head of the department of lock and dam construction, Civil Engineer Rousseau, United States Navy, is head of the department of municipal engineering, motive power and machinery, and building construction, Colonel Gorgas, of the medical corps, United States Army, is head of the department of sanitation, ex-Senator Blackburn is head of the department of civil administration, and Mr. Smith is head of the department of labor, quarters, and subsistence. Thus each Commissioner is in charge of some special branch of the work and all now reside on the Isthmus.

The Commission has excavated more than 20,000,000 cubic yards of earth and stone, has expended over $2,300,000 on account of the government of the Canal Zone, and spent over $5,000,000 for sanitation. The principal streets of Panama and Colon have been paved. Waterworks and sewer systems have been established throughout the Canal Zone, and extensive mechanical plants established. The Panama Railroad has been double tracked and additional sidings and storage tracks built. As the plan of the canal necessitates the abandonment of the present main line of the railroad, the final location of the new line has been determined and the work of construction is now progressing. Fifteen hotels for Americans, eighteen mess halls for Europeans, and twenty-three kitchens for West Indian laborers have been operated. Three thousand buildings have been prepared for married and single employees and laborers. The entire force employed consists of over 30,000 men.

Comparison of the Panama Canal and Reclamation services.—Both of these large undertakings were initiated at about the same time, each being authorized by act of Congress in the month of June, 1902. In the five years that have elapsed since the works were authorized they have been carried on to a point where some interesting comparisons may be made. There are, however, radical points of difference which must be borne in mind. The work of the Canal Commission is concentrated on a narrow strip of territory 50 miles long. The work of the Reclamation Service, on the contrary, is scattered over the western half of the United States, being carried on in fourteen States and three Territories.

For the above reasons entirely distinct types of organization have been necessary. At Panama the work can be supervised and actually seen by one man within a short period of time. On the other hand, the operations of the Reclamation Service are so widely scattered that no one man has ever seen all the work which is being carried on. It is physically impossible for one man to visit and inspect all of the reclamation structures which are now being built, even if he travels continuously throughout the year.

The Isthmian Canal Commission has encountered the difficulties which are inherent in the divided responsibility of a commission intensified by rapid changes in its personnel. On the other hand, the Reclamation Service has been practically under the charge of one man, and there has been no radical change of personnel. The work of the Isthmian Canal Commission has been dependent to a certain extent upon several acts of Congress, and the larger features of its operations have been passed upon in some detail by the representatives of the people. The work of the Reclamation Service, intrusted virtually to a single man, has been peculiarly fortunate in being carried on in accordance with a predetermined policy. Questions of detail have been settled wholly within the organization by conference with experts and without dissension. For example, the types of the larger works to be built, such as great dams, have been considered carefully by men designated for this purpose, and when decision has ultimately been reached the work has been pushed forward at once without delay.

The gross amount of money appropriated up to the present time for the Panama Canal and Railroad, including payment to the French company and to Panama, is, in round numbers, $130,000,000, of which about $75,000,000 is for construction. The amount of money available for construction in the reclamation fund during the same period is less than half as much, or, in round numbers, $33,000,000.

The organization and equipment of the work at Panama may probably be considered now as fairly complete, there being upward of 30,000 laborers and employees of all grades, including those on the Panama Canal. In comparison with this, the Reclamation Service may also be said to have reached its period of maximum output, with about 14,000 laborers, or nearly half as many.

The total estimated amount of earth to be removed for the Panama Canal, as estimated in June, 1904, is 112,000,000 cubic yards. Of this amount there have been moved up to the present time about 20,000,000 yards. The Reclamation Service has moved in its work a total of about 40,000,000 yards of earth and rock, or more than one-third of the total to be handled at Panama. The Isthmian Canal Commission has sixty-three steam shovels in commission, against seventeen in the Reclamation Service. A greater part of the work of the Reclamation Service is being done, however, not by steam shovels, but by plow and scraper and smaller tools, as the operations are widely distributed and are not sufficiently concentrated at one spot to allow the use of large machines of this character. For the purpose of excavating and handling the material the Service now utilizes 7,000 horses and mules on the work.

The problem at Panama is mainly the excavation of a canal prism, including enormous culebræ and the excavation for foundations and the construction of locks. The work of the Reclamation Service is in far larger proportion a construction of dams, headgates, and many other structures, mainly of concrete.

The canal work will probably be completed in five or six years, while the reclamation work under the operations of the present law, if no changes are made, will continue indefinitely. Many interesting comparisons might be made concerning the character of the work of the two organizations. For example, the Bohio dam, proposed for water supply for the canal, will have an estimated surface area a little over 40 square miles. In comparison with this the reservoirs formed by the Roosevelt dam, now under construction in Arizona, will have a surface area of little over 25 miles and the area of the Deerfield Reservoir, in the vicinity of Boise, Idaho, will have an area of 22 square miles. The length of the Bohio dam is given as 2,246 feet, while the Owl Creek dam, at Belle Fourche, S. Dak., will have a total length of 6,200 feet. Both of these dams are of earth.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to be relieved from service on the Committee on Privileges and Elections and the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

Mr. President, lest my request might be misconstrued, I desire to say that in asking to be so relieved I do not wish to be considered as in the slightest degree criticizing the efforts of the committee or committees. That committee has performed its duty; but I think any Senator who will consider the number of bills relating to private pensions and the number of bills that go to the Committee on Indian Affairs that are daily introduced will understand that the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, who is also a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, will have probably about as much business of a semiprivate character as he is capable of taking care of. Therefore, in order that those Senators who are desirous of going upon the committees from which I ask to be relieved may be assigned to them before the holiday recess, I am making this application at this time.

Service on the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, Mr. President, will require a great deal of arduous labor, and in view of my association with other committees I feel that I can not do justice to that committee. Certainly I could not do justice either to the committee or to myself if I did my entire duty upon the other committees of which I am a member. I therefore respectfully ask the Senate to relieve me from service on the two committees I have named.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to be relieved from further service on the Committee on Privileges and Elections and the Committee on Revision of the Laws. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

ORGANIZED MILITIA.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 14) extending the time allowed the organized militia of the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia to conform to the provisions of section 3 of the act approved January 21, 1903.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It proposes to extend the time allowed the organized militia of the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in which to conform their organization, armament, and discipline to that which is now or may hereafter be prescribed for the Regular and Volunteer armies of the United States by section 3 of the act approved January 21, 1903, to January 21, 1910.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President, under section 1661 of the Revised Statutes of the United States the States and Territories and the District of Columbia participate in the two million annual appropriation for the maintenance of the National Guard. In the law approved January 21, 1903, a provision was inserted requiring the States and Territories and the District of Columbia to conform in all respects in the organization of the National Guard with the Regular Army. That, for some reason, has not been entirely possible of accomplishment. The purpose of this joint resolution is to grant two additional years in order that the provisions of the act of January 21, 1903, may in all respects be complied with. The passage of the joint resolution will work no harm to any one. It simply grants a little more time for the accomplishment of the real purpose of the act of January 21, 1903. The reason for it is that the time expires on the 21st of January next, and unless the joint resolution is passed by Congress there are some States which will not be able to participate in the appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, while it is usual to have matters of this kind referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, I am entirely willing, so far as I am concerned, that the joint resolution shall now be placed on its passage. As the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DICK] has said, the time limit fixed in the law for the making of certain changes in the organization of the militia expires on the 21st of next month. The legislatures of certain States will meet, perhaps, prior to that time or soon thereafter, and I shall be glad to have the joint resolution disposed of now.

Mr. BACON. If the joint resolution is not long, I ask that it be again read.

The Secretary again read the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 18, 1907, at 12 o'clock meridian.

STOCK OWNERSHIP OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE CORPORATIONS.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be directed to inform the Senate whether any corporations engaged in interstate commerce are the owners of any of the capital stock of other corporations which are transporting passengers and freight; and if so, the Commission is further directed to transmit a statement showing the extent and details of such ownership so far as the facts now appear in the office of the Commission, and to state in what cases the corporations whose stock so owned have been competitors for traffic with the corporations owning their stock.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the resolution had better be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not see why we can not call for the information. The resolution simply proposes to ask the Interstate Commerce Commission to give us the facts. It does not want any opinion. It does not want any suggestions. It merely wants to know what is the situation to-day, and I do not see any reason why the Senator from Rhode Island should object to it.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Interstate Commerce Commission is engaged in a great variety of very important and very serious matters affecting all the people of the United States. If I did not misapprehend the purpose of the resolution and its extent, it would require a great deal of time and labor on the part of the Interstate Commerce Commission to furnish the facts. I desire to have the resolution go to the Committee on Interstate Commerce that they may find out whether it is desirable that the Interstate Commerce Commission at this time should make the inquiry; that is all.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is not an inquiry; it is a suggestion that the Interstate Commerce Commission send us the facts now on hand.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will examine the resolution I think he will see that it is entirely harmless.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Committee on Interstate Commerce should consider the question.

Mr. TILLMAN. When will that committee meet?

Mr. ALDRICH. Immediately after the holiday recess, undoubtedly.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will examine the resolution I am sure he can not see any reason for objecting to it. But he is suspicious, I am afraid.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am always more or less suspicious of resolutions that come from the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. Why? Because the Senator from South Carolina wants to get some facts the Senator from Rhode Island wants to conceal?

Mr. ALDRICH. Not that at all; but he may want to get facts in a manner which will fit into his preconceived notions of what ought to be done or how it ought to be done.

Mr. TILLMAN. I simply want the facts for the use of the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand that, but I think the resolution is too broad in its scope to be adopted without reference to the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. TILLMAN. It will have to go over, of course, and that means that it goes over until after the Christmas holidays, but I want to debate it a little before it goes to the committee.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no objection to the Senator debating it.

CONTROL OF LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. TILLMAN. I submit another resolution. I expect it will share the same fate, but still I am going to try to get something done here.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce be instructed to consider and report, by bill or otherwise, what legislation is desirable or necessary to enable the States in the exercise of their police powers to control the commerce in liquors and all alcoholic beverages within their borders, so as to aid the cause of temperance and to prevent the encouragement by the United States Government of illicit dealing in the same.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is very evident that the resolution, if it is to be adopted, ought to direct the Committee on the Judiciary to make inquiry and not the Committee on Interstate Commerce. It is purely a legal question that is involved, and if any committee is to be instructed it should be the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am willing to send it to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to have it passed. I do not want to have it referred. I want the instruction to go to the committee to report to the Senate what is the law now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina ask for the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The chair will put the question and then recognize the Senator from New Jersey. The Senator from South Carolina asks for the present consideration of the resolution which has just been read. Is there objection?

Mr. KEAN. I ask the Senator from South Carolina if he wants the Senate to instruct the different States in the Union what laws they should pass in order to protect their own police powers. Is that what he means?

Mr. TILLMAN. No; that is not it at all.

Mr. KEAN. Then I misunderstood the resolution.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will allow me I will explain it.

Mr. KEAN. Let the resolution be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the resolution.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator understand it now?

Mr. KEAN. It seems to me that it is trying to instruct the States what to do.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, I can not help the Senator's construction, but my purpose, if he will allow me to explain it, is simply this: The question where the police power begins and where the interstate power of Congress ends has been one which has harassed and bedeviled every State which has undertaken to control liquor. As governor of South Carolina I had extensive experience along this line. I have had occasion to examine the decisions of the Supreme Court in reference to it, and I have watched the gradual shading away and obliteration and suspension of the law which I hold in my hand.

When Iowa had this question of prohibition up, the appeal from Iowa in regard to the introduction into that State of liquor in original packages caused Congress to pass what is known as the "Wilson Act," which I will read:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled—

This is the law now—

, That all fermented, distilled, or other intoxicating liquors or liquids transported into any State or Territory or remaining therein for use, consumption, sale or storage therein, shall upon arrival in such State or Territory be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory enacted in the exercise of its police powers, to the same extent and in the same manner as though such liquids or liquors had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise.

Now, that is the law. The court in explaining or in interpreting the meaning of Congress has declared that liquors do not arrive under this act until they have been delivered to the consignee, and from one degree of interpretation to another they have gone on until they have absolutely turned loose outside liquor dealers to send whisky into prohibition territory ad libitum.

I simply desire to have the Judiciary Committee or the Interstate Commerce Committee, or any committee, or the Senate itself, deal with this question and determine how far Congress will or can limit or relinquish, as this act proposed to do, the control over interstate traffic in intoxicating beverages. That is all the object of the resolution I have offered.

Mr. ALDRICH. Has the resolution been modified so as to instruct the Judiciary Committee instead of the Interstate Commerce Committee?

Mr. TILLMAN. I am perfectly willing to let it go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator wants to have it passed, I understand.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes. I move to amend by striking out "the Interstate Commerce Committee" and inserting "the Committee on the Judiciary."

Mr. ALDRICH. With that amendment, as the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary is in the Chamber, I shall not interpose any objection.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If any committee has to deal with this question, the Judiciary Committee is perfectly willing to assume the responsibility. At the same time I shall be glad to have the resolution again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution as modified will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to consider and report, by bill or otherwise, what legislation is desirable or necessary to enable the States, in the exercise of their police powers, to control the commerce in liquors and all alcoholic beverages within their borders so as to aid the cause of temperance and to prevent the encouragement by the United States Government of illicit dealing in the same.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It occurs to me that that is a rather difficult proposition to throw upon the Committee on the Judiciary or upon any other committee. It may be that upon investigating the proposition no committee would be able to frame a bill that would give the relief that is asked by the resolution; and certainly neither the Judiciary Committee, I imagine, nor any other committee would desire to instruct any State as to what measures they should take for their own relief or protection.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator understands the resolution to mean that I desire to have any committee here instruct a State, he is wholly out of his bearings, because I am a State's rights Democrat, if the Senator can interpret that, and I know what I mean in regard to those words. I do not ask Congress to instruct a State as to what it shall do in the exercise of its police powers, because I know the Constitution expressly reserves to the States the right to police themselves inside of their borders. But what I am after is to define the line, that Congress may make it so clear that nobody can misunderstand where the interstate power of Congress ends and where the police powers of a State begin.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to the fact that there is no question as to the kind of Democrat the Senator is, and I congratulate him that he takes that decided stand. But I desire to call the attention of the Senator also to what I understand to be the fact of the case, that it is not a question for Congress, but it is a question for the courts to determine as to the efficiency of the remedy that is provided. So before the resolution goes to the Judiciary Committee, if it shall go there, I wished to call the attention of the Senator to the difficulties that the committee will have to contend with. That is the purpose for which I rose.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, the law which I read a moment ago, which is now on the statute books, has been construed by the Supreme Court in a certain way, and the construction of the court on this language would indicate that we did not do what we thought we tried to do in 1890, and that is to allow the police power to attach as soon as whisky entered the borders of a State. The court declared that the police power does not attach until it has gone to a given point in the State and has been delivered by the interstate carrier to the consignee. Now, if that means arrival I do not know what arrival means. Bills have been introduced here which have sought to modify the Wilson law of 1890 so as to leave the Supreme Court no reason to declare that the police power does not attach as soon as the whisky gets across the border.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I am sure we all sympathize with the purpose the Senator has in view, but in view of the difficulties I have suggested I would suggest to the Senator that the resolution be allowed to lie over, when, upon consultation, perhaps we can arrive at a resolution that will fit the bill and not result in embarrassment to the committee.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will assure me that the committee will really consider the resolution after it gets there and will report to us on this question——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will say this to the Senator: I hoped that no assurance would be necessary either to the Senator or anybody else that the committee will justly and fairly consider any question sent before that committee.

Mr. TILLMAN. Apologizing, then, to the chairman of the committee, I will agree to let the resolution go to the Committee on the Judiciary, where it will be passed upon.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. My suggestion was that the resolution be allowed to lie over under the rules until a little consultation may be had upon the subject.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am perfectly willing to do that. It is no hurry matter. It will keep.

Mr. BACON rose.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will just let the resolution lie over, unless the Senator from Georgia wishes to be heard.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I wish to say a word before the resolution passes from the consideration of the Senate. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina and of the Senate to what will naturally be the course the consideration of this resolution will take when it goes before the Committee on the Judiciary.

If there were no bills to be introduced upon this subject, of course the natural course of the consideration when ordered by the Senate would be that the Judiciary Committee would to the best of its ability investigate the question and endeavor to report by bill or otherwise, according as it might reach a conclusion, one way or the other. But the fact is that there is a practical situation which will necessarily control the action of the committee. That practical situation is one which, while it may not exactly exist at present, will certainly exist during the session, as follows: During the last session of the last Congress there were several bills upon this subject. One of them was introduced in the House by Mr. LITTLEFIELD, of Maine, passed the House, and came to the Senate and was referred to the Judiciary Committee. Another upon the same subject and along the same lines was introduced by the Senator from Tennessee, Mr. Carmack, and was also referred to the Judiciary Committee. Upon those bills a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee heard very elaborate and extended arguments, both by persons who were not Members of Congress, but who were interested in the subject, representatives of large interests which would be affected by the proposed legislation, and by Members of the House of Representatives who had been instrumental in the procurement of the passage of the bill through the House.

Those bills were not reported from the Judiciary Committee because of the fact that it was a short session, and owing to the number and variety of interests to be affected desiring to be heard the hearings were not concluded. It was not practicable for the Judiciary Committee of the Senate in that short session to complete the hearings and make a report.

Now, the practical point to which I call the attention of the Senate and of the Senator from South Carolina is this.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. KNOX. I should like to remind the Senator from Georgia of the fact that the Senator who had proposed the bill in the Senate requested the subcommittee not to report and that the subcommittee was relieved from reporting by the action of the committee.

Mr. BACON. That is a fact. I think the Senator will also bear me out in the statement, as he and I were both upon the subcommittee, that while we had that request the hearings were not completed, and that we could not have made a proper report to the Senate in the short session even if there had not been that request made. But that request was made and relieved us to a certain extent of the responsibility for increased activity so that we might possibly have reported it.

Now what I wish to call the attention of the Senate to is this: These bills, whether they have been introduced or not, certainly will be introduced. It is an acute question, and there is bound to be legislation upon it.

When this resolution is sent to the committee—and to the sending of it to the committee I see no objection whatever—the committee, knowing the fact that it must pass not simply upon the abstract question, but upon concrete bills, will necessarily take the instructions of the Senate to be such as they can comply with by reporting upon bills which will be introduced. I myself—while I, of course, yield to the suggestion of the chairman of the committee that the resolution shall lie over—see no objection to its passage, with the statement in advance that we know the fact that we not only have to consider the general resolution, or the general instruction of the resolution, but that we will have several specific bills involving the direct question upon which we must make specific recommendations one way or the other. With the experience of the last session, I have no doubt that before the end of the long session, which is now with us, there will be a report to the Senate by the Judiciary Committee upon the exact questions which are proposed to be reached by this resolution. So I repeat that, while I will yield to the suggestion of the chairman, I myself would be willing that the resolution should pass, with a full knowledge of the fact that it would form but one part, one feature, of the general subject which we must go through with in its entirety at the present session in the deliberations of Congress and in the deliberations of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, of course, if the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] desires this resolution to go to the Judiciary Committee I shall offer no objection to that course; but I can not exactly understand why the resolution should go to any committee except the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. The resolution as drawn instructed the Interstate Commerce Committee to consider and report, but, the suggestion having come from the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] that the resolution ought to go to the Judiciary Committee, I was perfectly willing to let it go to either of those committees. I myself in drawing the resolution had in mind the fact that this is a question of interstate commerce. The question, however, which is involved is, where interstate commerce begins and the police powers of the States attach.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I will say that this precise question has been before the Committee on the Judiciary at least for five or six different Congresses. It has been considered by that committee, and I think very properly so. I think if we instruct that committee to inquire as to what changes in the law, if any, ought to take place, it would meet the suggestion of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I entered the Chamber just as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] was consenting to the change in the wording of the resolution; but I believe, in the interest of orderly procedure, that this, like all other matters of its kind, ought to go to the Interstate Commerce Committee. If it were an original matter, I should myself have preferred to see it go to the Judiciary Committee, because until the decision in what is known as the "original package case" this was a question of police and not of commerce. I think much of the confusion and difficulty which has arisen over the enforcement of State laws regulating and, in some instances, prohibiting the sale of liquor has grown out of the fact that the Supreme Court held the sale of liquor to be a matter of commerce instead of a matter of police.

I never will assent here or elsewhere to the proposition that the Federal Government's power to regulate commerce is superior to the State's power to protect the health, the morals, or the peace and good order of its people. We are in the habit of calling them the police powers of the State, but as a matter of fact they are the most essential of all sovereign powers. It was a loose and unfortunate habit of speech which led the profession of the law, and after them the legislators of the country, to speak of these great and essential powers as a mere matter of police regulation. They existed before this General Government was ever dreamed of, and they can not be annihilated by the State or by the General Government. The State can contract away its right to levy taxes, according to the decision of the courts, but the State can not contract away what we are accustomed to calling its police power. But I presume this complaint comes too late. I presume it is now the settled law of this land, although it was not settled that way originally. The original decision on this question, which was known as the "New Hampshire case," held that it was competent for the State to deal, and to deal in its own way and without limitation and according to its own judgment, with liquor introduced within its borders from another State, but in the progress of events the court modified that decision, and I presume we must now deal with it as settled.

Accepting it as settled, then, the only question to be dealt with here is merely to define, as I understand the late decision of the court, the term "upon arrival." The court was right under this act in saying that the liquor had within the meaning of the law only arrived in the State when it reached its point of destination, but if it were competent for Congress in the beginning to vest the State with power to regulate interstate commerce—and that is one of the absurdities which have led to this confusion of doctrine from the beginning to the end—if it were competent for Congress to do that, surely it is competent for Congress to define what it means by "arrival;" and all that is necessary in the amendment of this law is simply to provide that Congress may permit the State to deal with this question upon the arrival of the liquor whenever it crosses the border of the State and before it is delivered to the consignee. In that view of it it seems to me purely a question of interstate commerce.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, except for one expression in this resolution, I would have nothing to say. As I caught it when read at the desk, it directs the Committee on the Judiciary to report by bill or otherwise what legislation is necessary to enable each State to control what is within the police power of the State; or, I may go further, what is intrastate commerce. Assuming, Mr. President, that the matter we are called upon, or will be called upon, to deal with is commerce of one character or another, interstate or intrastate commerce, an act of Congress, and of course the report of a committee of Congress could not add to or take from the constitutional powers of the States or of the Federal Government.

The Constitution provides that Congress shall regulate interstate commerce and no act of the legislature of any State can add to or take from that authority.

The Constitution also provides that all powers not delegated by that instrument are reserved to the States respectively or to the people, and no act upon the part of Congress or of a committee of Congress can affect that reservation. In other words, if it be in fact interstate commerce, Congress alone can regulate it; if it be in fact intrastate commerce, the States alone can regulate it, and if it be fairly within the power of the States to control their own domestic affairs as they relate to good order and morals—that is, the police power—no act of Congress is necessary to permit the States to exercise that power and no act of Congress could take from the State any of such powers which they possess.

So, Mr. President, I doubt whether any act of Congress or any report of any committee of Congress can reach the question. The States will determine for themselves how far they may go; the Federal Congress will determine for itself how far the National Government may go, and it will be left in the end to the courts when these questions shall arise between parties to lawsuits.

I do not, however, Mr. President, subscribe to the general doctrine that it is for the courts to determine constitutional questions; but it is true that when a constitutional question arises between parties to litigation it may become necessary for the courts to determine a question of that character. Then, as a rule of action, though we may not agree argumentatively, we submit to the judgment of the Supreme Court upon it.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I wish to ask the Senator this question: Recognizing and observing the constitutional rights of both the State and the General Government, can Congress not adopt the laws of a State applicable to interstate commerce and make them applicable, so far as may be deemed wise, to interstate commerce within its borders?

Mr. CULBERSON. That would be an act of Congress, Mr. President, and its operation would be as an act of Congress.

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. But I am only calling the attention of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to a matter which has been a long while in my mind, and that is, that neither sovereignty can take from or add to the power of the other, and that if Congress by an act undertakes to clothe the States with power they do not possess under the Constitution, that act of Congress would be void. So, too, if the States, as has sometimes been suggested, would undertake to surrender to Congress power which has been reserved to them, such act of a State legislature, in my judgment, would be void.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CULBERSON. In a moment. In other words, after all, Mr. President, the question is, Where does the Constitution place the power? No act of the State and no act of Congress can add to or subtract from it. The source of Federal power is the Federal Constitution; the source of State power is its original sovereignty, less what it has granted to the Federal Government by the Federal Constitution.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I was going to suggest to the Senator that such a declaration would not settle anything; that even Congress can not define the extent to which interstate commerce goes; that all that Congress can do is to enact such legislation as it deems to be wise and within its power; and then the court is the final arbiter to determine whether or not we have exceeded our power or encroached upon the powers of the States.

We might say that interstate commerce extends so far; but that does not settle it; that the jurisdiction to regulate interstate commerce extends so far; but that does not settle it. We may have encroached upon the States by that legislation. If we have, it is for the court to determine. But I do contend—and I think that that is what the Senator from South Carolina had in mind—that Congress may adopt the laws of the States and can make the laws of the States applicable to articles of commerce the moment they arrive within the State.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I had no idea of getting up a learned debate upon a constitutional question when I asked for the passage of a very simple resolution; but I must say that the act which I just quoted clearly means, if it means anything, that Congress may declare where the interstate-commerce power ends, leaving the police power to begin of itself; and as this act has been declared constitutional by the Supreme Court, it is merely a question for Congress to so define what "arrival" means, as the Senator from Texas has just said, as to relieve the State authorities from interference by injunction or other proceedings of the Federal judiciary. I think the Senator from Texas, when he examines the act and the resolution, must necessarily see that I have no purpose to do more than to secure from Congress some active interference with the conditions which now exist and which have been brought about by the decision of the Supreme Court interpreting this very law.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I have had no purpose, of course, to provoke discussion, but I did not want the opportunity to pass without expressing my opinion of this peculiar language in the resolution. I do not remember to have heard the law read to which the Senator now calls attention. His resolution says that this committee shall report by bill or otherwise what legislation is desirable or necessary to do what? To enable the States in the exercise of their police power to control the commerce in liquors.

Mr. TILLMAN. Within their borders.

Mr. CULBERSON. What I call attention to is, How can the power of the States be affected by an enabling act of Congress?

Mr. TILLMAN. I say "within its borders," because if the Supreme Court had declared that this act of Congress permitted the police power to attach as soon as the liquor got within the borders of the State—if the Supreme Court had declared that the act did not mean that the liquor was not within the State until it got into the hands of the consignee we would have no trouble at all. But the Supreme Court has simply repealed this act of Congress. It has not declared it unconstitutional, but it has repealed it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, as an original proposition, I thoroughly agree with my colleague [Mr. CULBERSON], and I never have been able to subscribe to the doctrine of the court in the original decision.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is it; that is the original-package law.

Mr. BAILEY. That was the original case out of which grew this act. Nor have I ever been able to subscribe to the reasoning of the case which sustained the validity of this act of Congress. Of course my colleague and all the other lawyers of this body will recall that the reasoning of the court was this: That until Congress acted upon a given subject of interstate commerce it was competent for the State to act. That was the original doctrine as to all these concurrent powers. The court originally held that the States possessed concurrently with the Federal Government the power of naturalization. But gradually that doctrine was modified, and the court from time to time withdrew from the control and jurisdiction of the States certain questions. They finally were about to withdraw the whole question of interstate commerce and to hold that the States could not legislate at all to control interstate commerce.

My opinion is that that would have been a sound decision. I thoroughly agree with my colleague that it is not competent for the States to deal with a Federal question nor for the Federal Government to deal with a State question of police regulation; but after the court, under what is known as the "original-package decision," held the law of Iowa invalid, then Congress sought to meet that with this act, which amounts purely and simply to an abdication of Federal power to the States. In other words, if it had not been for this act, no State in this Union could have enforced its laws prohibiting the sale of liquor. It was to enable the States—and I repeat for the second or third time that that is the absurdity running through the whole line of decisions—it was for the specific and avowed purpose of enabling the States to enforce their police-regulation laws that this act was originally passed in the House of Representatives and afterwards passed by this body. There was no pretense of any other object or purpose at the time than that the decision of the Supreme Court having deprived the States of the power to regulate the sale of liquor as long as it was in the original package, the Congress sought to modify and remedy that decision by the enactment of this law; and we have the anomaly, and, as I think, the indefensible condition, of being compelled to come to Congress for a law that permits the States of this Union to efficiently enforce their sovereign right of regulating their police concerns.

This law was passed for that purpose, but those who drafted it were not quite so specific as they might have been. The fact is, I think, that it was one of those hasty pieces of legislation dashed off in a kind of delirium, and such laws generally are found to be a little wanting. Perhaps if that law is to be amended it would be well for lawyers who know just how far the Federal Government can go in this matter to draft it, and draft it with great care, so that we shall have no more necessity of legislating along this line.

If I had my way, I would love to go back and redeclare as the law of this land the opinion of the old court in the New Hampshire liquor case.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. KNOX. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. I have concluded, unless the Senator from South Carolina desires to ask me a question.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, before the Senator from Pennsylvania enlightens us, as no doubt he will, for he is a great lawyer, I simply want to call the attention of the Senator from Texas to the unfairness, as I think, of his criticism of the law. I will read it again:

Be it enacted, etc., That all fermented, distilled, or other intoxicating liquors or liquids transported into any State or Territory or remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein, shall upon arrival in such State or Territory be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory enacted in the exercise of its police powers, to the same extent and in the same manner as though such liquids or liquors had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise.

It says, "into any State." What does "into" mean? If I send a boy out to bring water into the Senate Chamber, does it have to get to my desk before it is in the Senate Chamber? "Arrival." When is liquor said to arrive in a State? When it gets to the consignee or when it gets inside the borders of the State? If the Senator were going to Texas, after he crossed the Rio Grande River would he say that he had not arrived in Texas until he got to Gainesville, where his home is? I can not help the fact that the Supreme Court refined all the English in this act. The Senator can go on and charge that Mr. Wilson was in a delirium or hysteria or whatever he sees fit, but to my mind it is perfectly plain now. The only thing, however, is that the Supreme Court has declared that this is constitutional, but not sufficiently explicit; and if Congress sees fit to make it so explicit that the Supreme Court can not refine it away again we will have accomplished what I am trying to do.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from South Carolina has had long experience in the public service and he has assisted in the making of many laws—enough to know that the ordinary everyday way in which we talk is not exactly the safe way to write it in the law. Undoubtedly, if I were to say, "Bring some water into the Senate Chamber," it would be in when it came through the door, but if I ordered it brought to me it would make precious little difference to me whether it was inside or outside until it reached me.

If the Senator will take the trouble to examine the cases, he will find that the Supreme Court was not refining on that question. There is a line of fairly well-marked decisions along that line. I am not criticising the Congress, and I did not intend to criticise Mr. Wilson. I was not then in Congress, but, as I remember, in common with many other men, I was rather shocked, or rather, I would better say, surprised, and greatly surprised when the Supreme Court handed down that decision in the Iowa case.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me a minute?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BAILEY. Allow me to conclude my sentence. I believe I am not greatly mistaken when I say that within forty-eight hours anyway, and probably within twenty-four hours, after the original-package decision this bill was in the House of Representatives and the Members of that body were running over each other to pass it. I regard that as somewhat hasty legislation. If they had taken more time and if men skilled in a knowledge and in the phraseology of the law had carefully prepared this act, I think they would have prepared it in a way to have made it manifest to the court that Congress intended what the Senator now desires to do and what I believe the Congress itself at that time intended to do.

I thoroughly agree with the Senator from South Carolina that the men who framed and the men who passed that act believed that the moment the liquor crossed the border of a State it became subject to the jurisdiction of the Commonwealth. But if they meant that they were not exactly fortunate in expressing it. I say to the Senator from South Carolina that neither he nor I can assent to the proposition that the court will exercise itself in saying what we mean unless we make our meaning plain. I do not want to give any court in this land the right to say that Congress meant this, although the Congress said something else, and perhaps a very different thing. The courts ought to follow the language. Of course courts must be reasonable, and they are. But the court is bound to believe that lawmakers make laws with a knowledge of the history of jurisprudence and with a knowledge of what the courts have construed certain expressions to mean. If, with that knowledge before them, the law had been carefully considered, I think that it would originally have contained what the Senator from South Carolina now wants to write into it.

Without intending to criticise Mr. Wilson or anybody else, I still think that the history of that event will show that they hurriedly drew this bill and as hurriedly passed it at the time. I think they had a very short debate on it, although it involved what I conceive to be a most vital principle of the Republic.

Mr. TILLMAN. I rose merely to suggest to the Senator from Texas that his argument is along the line of declaring that the Supreme Court was wrong and acted hastily. I think in re Rahrer, the first original-package case——

Mr. BAILEY. I think that was the Kansas case.

Mr. TILLMAN. I used to be familiar with the titles of the cases, but as I am not a lawyer I get rusty on them. There was a decision of the Supreme Court which held that liquor in original packages was not subject to the police power until it got out of the original package, and that caused the passage of this act.

Mr. BAILEY. It has been some time since I have examined the question, but my impression is that the Iowa case, which was the first case, was one where a liquor dealer sued a railroad company for refusing to transport liquors into the State, and the court held that he could recover; that the railroad had no right to refuse to transport it in original packages. And then in the Kansas case came the question of selling it in the original package. However, the Kansas case followed the same lines as did the Iowa case, going even a little further.

Mr. TILLMAN. This law, as I understand, was intended by Congress to give the State control of whisky after it arrived within its borders, and the Supreme Court has shaded it away. Whether or not the Supreme Court is right in interpreting the constitutional power of Congress in controlling interstate commerce, of course we must acknowledge that it has the last say, and we have to obey it. Whether Congress intends to let the court's say, as it now is on the books, remain, and let this act be the last attempt to give relief, is another question.

I am trying to get the Senate to declare whether or not the decisions of the Supreme Court, as they are now and as they have been in recent years, along the line of absolutely destroying the States' control of liquor within their borders, shall stand. That is the whole question. I am glad we have had enough discussion of it to indicate that the Senate takes some interest in it, and that it will not be allowed to sleep this session.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from South Carolina mean to say that if we pass his resolution the Senate will be declaring what he says we ought to declare?

Mr. TILLMAN. No; I do not.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, whatever form this resolution may take or whether the question shall come up under this resolution or under a bill, there is just one point involved and everything else revolves about that.

I had the honor to be chairman of the subcommittee which had this question under consideration, my colleagues being the late Senator from Wisconsin and the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Prior to the passage of what is known as the Wilson Act the law was this: The Supreme Court had decided that intoxicating liquors were legitimate subjects of commerce and had been so from the foundations of civilization. The courts had decided that commerce between the States was under the exclusive control of the Congress of the United States, and the courts had decided that it was an incident to the right to engage in interstate commerce that the consignee of intoxicating liquors shipped from one State into another had the right to sell those liquors in the original package. I think every lawyer in the Chamber will agree with me that that was the condition of the law prior to the passage of the Wilson Act.

Now, I have not the most remote doubt, Mr. President, that it was the intention of the framers of the Wilson law, as it was likewise the intention of both branches of Congress when they passed the law, to surrender to the States, so far as intoxicating liquors were concerned, the right to say whether or not they should be under the control of the States from the moment of their arrival within the borders of the States and not from the time they reached the hands of the consignee.

But unfortunately for those who contended for that position, and likewise unfortunately for those who voted for the bill with that in mind, the Supreme Court decided—and whether the Supreme Court were right or whether they were wrong, in our judgment, their decision is to-day the law of the land—first, that arrival meant the period of time when the goods reached the consignee. Now, then, the great and interesting constitutional question arose, inasmuch as the courts had declared that the right to sell in the original package was an incident to the right to engage in interstate commerce, whether Congress could take away that right and vest in the State authorities the right to say that the goods could not be sold in original packages. In other words, whether Congress could surrender to the control of the States one of the incidents or rights of interstate commerce. The Supreme Court, in the decision upon the Wilson Act, said that was within the power of Congress, and although that act meant that the goods should go to the consignee, yet the State had the right to say that the consignee should not sell them within the State even in the original package.

Now, the people who propose this measure and the movement that is almost as wide as the borders of our land were not satisfied with these decisions, and the result was that at the last session of Congress it was put squarely up to us to determine whether or not this law could be so amended as without doubt to express the view that the State should have absolute control over intoxicating liquors the instant they crossed the State line.

I do not believe, Mr. President, that it is at all necessary to deal with this matter by a resolution. You are perfectly certain within a very short time to have bills presented which will raise that exact question just as you had them raised last session. The bill passed the House. There was a bill introduced in the Senate by the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] and another by Senator Carmack, of Tennessee. There was an argument made by Mr. LITTLEFIELD of the House before the subcommittee; the counsel for the liquor interests appeared; various temperance organizations were heard; and the most elaborate hearings were conducted; and the only question involved was this single one—whether we can now do what the people who were back of the Wilson Act thought they were doing when that act was passed, namely, surrender the control of articles which the Supreme Court has said are legitimate subjects of interstate commerce and place them under the authority of the States, notwithstanding that under the Constitution of the United States Congress has the control of interstate commerce until the goods shipped from one State to another reach the hands of the consignee.

I am not in the slightest degree intending to indicate any view that I entertain upon this subject, but I think that under the circumstances I was justified, if not required, to give the Senate the benefit of the information I had gathered upon the subject while in the service of the Senate on that subcommittee.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to add simply one word to what the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] has so ably stated, and that is, to follow out the line of his argument, if Congress had the power to relinquish in the Wilson law a part of its rights in reference to interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors, as the Senator concedes Congress had the right to do, we have a right to go a step further. We have a right to amend this law by putting in the words, "after the arrival of the goods in any State and before delivery to the consignee." Congress has that power. It would be a regulation of commerce by Congress, and it would settle the question absolutely.

Now, as to the theoretical questions which the Senators from Texas were discussing, as to whether we can define what is interstate commerce and what is not interstate commerce, and where it begins and where it ends, and what is the dividing line between interstate commerce and the police power of the State, I doubt whether Congress has the power to define it. That is a question for the courts to settle. But assuming that this is interstate commerce and assuming that it continues to be interstate commerce until it is delivered to the consignee, Congress has a right, under its power to regulate commerce, to say that it shall be subject to the laws of the State the minute it arrives within the boundaries of the State and before delivery to the consignee. So, if you add an amendment to the present law that it shall be subject to the laws of the State on its arrival in the State and before delivery to the consignee, you have settled it, and you have settled all the constitutional questions, because if there is a constitutional question we have relinquished our power to the State to that extent, and we have just as much right to relinquish it to that extent as to the extent to which the Senator from Pennsylvania referred under the Wilson law.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have no desire to comment on the proposition that Congress should pass a bill to enable the States to exercise their police powers. It is a very interesting form of words, emanating from a States' rights Democrat. But what I wanted to call attention to is the latter part of the resolution. The junior Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] made some very sensible remarks about legislation passed in delirium, and, although I do not think we are going to pass this resolution in a state of delirium, I think it is well that it should be correctly framed. I think the Senator from South Carolina, the author of the resolution, will see the necessity of changing the wording, if the Clerk will have the kindness to read the latter part of the resolution again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The Secretary read as follows:

What legislation is desirable or necessary to enable the States, in the exercise of their police powers, to control the commerce in liquors and all alcoholic beverages within their borders so as to aid the cause of temperance and to prevent the encouragement by the United States Government of illicit dealing in the same.

Mr. LODGE. As it is now worded "the same" refers to the cause of temperance—illicit dealing in the cause of temperance—and of course I think what the Senator from South Carolina intended was illicit dealing in alcoholic beverages. [Laughter.]

Mr. BACON obtained the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the clerk send the resolution here?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia is entitled to the floor. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course, on a question——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BACON. The Senator from South Carolina has not given me an opportunity to answer the question of the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator will excuse me. I did not notice that he had risen. He is on my blind side. Therefore I had not noticed that my good-looking friend had risen.

I was about to say that on the general proposition I would surrender at discretion to the learned and well-educated Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], but I will read the resolution again and see if I can get the meaning out of it that he did or whether his interpretation is the correct one.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to consider and report, by bill or otherwise, what legislation is desirable or necessary to enable the States, in the exercise of their police powers, to control the commerce in liquors and all alcoholic beverages within their borders so as to aid the cause of temperance and to prevent the encouragement by the United States Government of illicit dealing in the same.

[Laughter.]

"The same" could refer by a little stretch of the imagination—and the Senator has a very brilliant one sometimes—to illicit dealing in liquors instead of the cause of temperance; but we will not act hastily, nor will we get drunk over this, which would be a more appropriate phrase when dealing with the measure relating to the subject of liquors and the commerce therein; and if the Senator wishes me to strike out the words "the same," or has any other suggestion so as to purify my English, I will be obliged to him if he will make it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. ALDRICH. I was going to move that the resolution be referred to the Judiciary Committee. It must be evident to the Senate——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BACON. I wish to say a word, and I shall not object to that suggestion directly.

On the question as to the particular committee to which the resolution should go, I may say that we of course recognize the fact that almost all of the committees of the Senate, in fact all of them, are largely composed of lawyers, and probably some of them are better lawyers than those found upon the Judiciary Committee. Nevertheless the debate has developed the fact that the question involved in this proposed legislation is one of constitutional law and an extremely difficult question. So far as I am personally concerned I should be very glad to be relieved of the labor of investigating it and of the duty of reporting to the Senate upon it.

I will simply say to the learned Senators who are not upon the committee, but who have been discussing these questions, that they have entered upon what is a field of discussion very much broader than they themselves have indicated in the views they have presented to the Senate. The subcommittee, of which the learned Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] was the chairman, heard arguments day in and day out, not upon abstract theories, but upon the decisions of the courts, and upon critical analysis and discussion of the principles upon which those decisions were based.

I wish to say simply one word in response to the suggestion originally made by the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and again alluded to by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], as to whether legislation upon this subject will be profitable or whether the respective powers of the States and of the General Government are such that no legislation, either by the States or by the General Government, can affect the question. It would not be proper at this time, if it were practicable, to go into an analysis of the decisions of the Supreme Court upon this question, but I wish to call attention to the fact that throughout those decisions there runs the general recognition of the proposition that the question of interstate commerce and the powers under the interstate-commerce clause are of two kinds: First, the questions which are fundamental and essential to the exercise of interstate commerce; and, second, the questions which, in the language of the court, are incidental. The court recognizes and announces in no uncertain words that so far as the functions of interstate commerce are fundamental and essential, no act of Congress can affect the same, but that so far as those functions are incidental legislation can be had. So far as the proposed legislation is concerned, it is really restricted to the field of dealing with such matters of interstate commerce, in regard to the buying and selling and importation of liquors, as are of an incidental character.

I am not sure that I am correct in my illustration; possibly I am not far wrong; and if the specific point is not correct it may serve for an illustration as to the difference between the fundamental and incidental. As stated by the Senator from Pennsylvania, the great fundamental principle in interstate commerce is the right of a man to make a contract, and to have the contract executed, for the purchase of goods in one State to be delivered to him in another. Under the decision in the original-package case the court held that the right did not terminate simply with the delivery of the goods, but that it extended to the further right to sell in the original package the goods thus delivered. The Supreme Court in construing the Wilson law recognized the fact that there could be a restriction in that particular, and that while it was the fundamental right of the party to have the goods delivered to him, the right to sell was an incidental right which could be controlled by Congress, and was controlled by Congress in the Wilson Act. There are four or five decisions upon the subject, and that distinction is bound to run throughout the whole of them. So there is a field of legislation in which the matter can be practically dealt with.

Mr. President, it has come to be an exceedingly important and acute question in the proposed legislation by Congress. I was very much surprised the other day when I saw a statement of the number of States in which there was either total or partial prohibition of the sale of liquors. A large majority of the States have either partial or total prohibition. The number of those which now have total prohibition is increasing and is going to continue to increase, and of course it should be the desire of Congress, and is the desire of Congress so far as it is practicable to do so, to make effective the legislation of the States in this regard.

In my own State there has recently been legislation by which after the 1st of January there will be total prohibition of the sale of liquors within the State, and whatever may be the view of any one of us as to the propriety of such a law, I am sure we all recognize the fact that so far as we can do so within the limitations and restrictions of the Constitution of the United States, we ought so to legislate as to make the legislation in each State effective.

I mentioned the fact, Mr. President, of a bill which had passed the House, introduced by Mr. LITTLEFIELD, and which had come to the Senate. There were several other bills, among them a very important bill by a Representative from my own State, Mr. BRANTLEY, and I think there were several others. Senators I am sure from the developments of this debate will be disposed to be a little patient with the Judiciary Committee when this subject comes to be investigated by it if it does not report with immediate promptitude, because it is a question of extreme difficulty to determine accurately within what limitations we can proceed to make effective legislation upon this subject. So far as it can be done I am sure there will be every disposition to do it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, while the resolution offers a splendid opportunity for any attorney who desires to do so to show what is his knowledge concerning interstate-commerce law, it seems to me, and I would make it as a suggestion to the Senator from South Carolina, that he could reach the point very much more easily by a simple bill declaring in so many words that the moment intoxicating liquors shipped into any State shall arrive within the borders of that State they shall become subject to the laws of such State in relation thereto; and submit it to the committee. It would raise every possible question, and the committee would then be compelled to determine whether or not Congress has authority to enact such a law. There is no doubt in the world in my mind of its authority to enact such a law, under the decisions of the Supreme Court. Why not, therefore, raise it in that simple way, and let the Committee on the Judiciary decide as to the authority of Congress to enact the law?

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. The reason why I did not introduce a bill of my own is that, having had some experience as governor in directing litigation and seeing the various refinements and hair-splitting arguments which were given us by the lawyers and the Supreme Court, I was dubious of being able so to word a bill as to accomplish the result, and I desired, in drawing the resolution, to state the purpose and then leave it to the able lawyers who are on that committee to present to the Senate a bill which in their judgment would accomplish the result.

Now, I want to call the Senator's attention to a phase of it which he has just brushed aside as not being worth while. In other words, he has announced that Congress can do what he says, when I do not believe Congress can do anything of the kind and that the Supreme Court will so declare. The question of the right of a citizen of one State to sell his product—whisky or whatnot—in another State for private use—personal consumption—would immediately arise if we were to make a sweeping law, or endeavor to permit the States to make a sweeping law, controlling all liquors regardless of the purpose, because I do not believe the Supreme Court would declare constitutional any act of Congress which allowed the State to prohibit absolutely the introduction into that State of liquor for private use, because it would be in excess of the police power.

I merely call the Senator's attention to that phase, and then he can go on and consider whether or not I have suggested a reason why it is necessary, as my friend the Senator from Texas has declared, that the very ablest lawyers we have in this body—men who are themselves competent to be Supreme Court judges—shall frame a law.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Supreme Court has decided one thing, and that is that goods of the character described, when passing into a State, may be subject to all of the laws of that State relating thereto. Whether you call it a surrender of the power of Congress or whether you say it is simply allowing the State to do that which Congress could do makes little difference. The Supreme Court has decided that the authority of the laws of the State over the subject-matter may be supreme, in view of the enactment of the Wilson Act. If Congress can do that, as has been suggested by the Senator from Minnesota, it can declare that those laws shall be operative the moment that the goods pass over the State line. There can be no possibility of any question as between the two powers.

Then the Senator can, by a bill or by a resolution, if he desires this committee to act on it, raise directly the question whether Congress has power to enact a law that intoxicating liquors, the moment they go over a State line, shall become subject to the laws of that State relating to intoxicating liquors. Then we would free the resolution of all the different matters that are rather vague in their terms and bring it right down to the simple question that the Senator wants decided as to whether or not Congress has that power.

I would suggest that it be simplified either in that form by a resolution or else in a bill introduced in something of the character the Senator has in mind, declaring that the State laws shall take hold of the article the moment that it enters or passes over the border of the State.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I am not especially wedded to this resolution or that it shall pass to-day. I simply desire to have this subject brought to the attention of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or the Judiciary Committee, as it has been suggested that that would be better, so that the able lawyers on both those committees would be instructed by the Senate to consider the question and report a bill which will accomplish the result or report that Congress can not do it. If we can do it I want to see it done. That is my idea.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. KNOX. The Senator from South Carolina will permit me to suggest that by the addition of two words to the Wilson Act you raise the whole question. The Wilson Act says "on arrival," and if you say "on arrival in the borders of a State" you have got the whole question.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will be kind enough to change it into a bill, so as to accomplish what he, as a great lawyer, says will effect the result, I am satisfied; and let the bill be introduced and referred to the committee. I have the act here. If it is so easy, let us do it.

Mr. KNOX. That was my idea in making the suggestion.

FOREST-RESERVE LANDS.

Mr. CARTER. While that matter is pending, I submit a resolution requesting some information from the Interior Department, and I ask for its adoption.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate the names of all persons, firms, and corporations who, since February 26, 1907, have filed in the Land Department proofs of their conveyance or relinquishment to the United States of lands within the limits of Government forest reserves, and who duly recorded the same in the proper county prior to the act of March 3, 1905, and who had prior to said act failed to select other public lands in lieu of the lands so conveyed or relinquished, or who have failed, through no fault of their own, to obtain patents to lands selected by them in lieu of lands so conveyed or relinquished, as provided by the act of June 4, 1897, and who can not, on account of said act of March 3, 1905, make such selection, and also report the number of acres so conveyed or relinquished.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is very evident that a conclusion will be reached by the contending parties in the matter which has been before the Senate, and I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOPKINS. Not yet, I hope.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island to withdraw that motion in order that the resolution which came over from yesterday may be taken up and disposed of.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will withhold the motion for a few moments.

Mr. CULBERSON. The resolution was postponed one day on account of the absence of the Senator from Rhode Island, and I hope he will not insist upon an executive session without a disposition of the resolution.

Mr. ALDRICH. To what resolution does the Senator refer?

Mr. CULBERSON. The resolution with reference to the present financial stringency, which is on the table subject to call, and which I intend to call up.

Mr. ALDRICH. For the purpose of making some remarks upon it?

Mr. CULBERSON. I want to call it up and dispose of it. If I see proper, I will talk about it a little.

Mr. ALDRICH. I withdraw the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island withdraws the motion. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New Hampshire.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON TUBERCULOSIS.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Whereas an International Congress on Tuberculosis will meet in Washington in September, 1908, the same being the Sixth International Congress on Tuberculosis, and the first to be held in America; and

Whereas seven of the nine Departments of the Federal Government have petitioned Congress for the authority and means to participate in this Congress; and

Whereas the governors of twenty-eight States of the United States have authorized the participation of their several States in this congress; and

Whereas the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis has provided the necessary means and created a special committee to secure the participation of voluntary and private interests in the coming International Congress on Tuberculosis; and

Whereas preceding international congresses occurring in other countries in the past fifteen years have been held under governmental auspices, and delegates from the United States have participated therein as guests of foreign governments: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Department of State be, and is hereby, authorized to invite the governments of other countries, through their ministries, to send representatives to the International Congress on Tuberculosis, to be held in Washington September 21 to October 12, 1908.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION IN ILLINOIS.

Mr. BOURNE. I am directed by the Committee on Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1708) to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Illinois, to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. I object to its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made and the bill will go to the Calendar.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the Senator from Texas that a similar bill passed the Senate at the last session. There is no change in it whatever. There was a unanimous report of the committee at the last session. I understand that the report of the committee at this session has been unanimous, and there is not a change of a word.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator what necessity there is for its immediate passage.

Mr. HOPKINS. Of course it can be delayed if there is any point in the delay.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator from Rhode Island withdrew a motion for an executive session in order that the resolution which is pending might be disposed of.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will state to the Senator from Texas that I had made the request of the Senator from Rhode Island, and the delay was quite as much in order that this bill might be considered.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well, under those circumstances I withdraw the objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to appropriate $25,000 for the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of Illinois, including purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, at some suitable point to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONTROL OF LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. CULBERSON rose.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to finish the resolution which has been dangling in the air here.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask leave to withdraw the resolution and to introduce a bill out of order and have the same read, having had the assistance of two of the ablest constitutional lawyers in preparing it, to accomplish the results which we all understand, and which they think would do it, if it is constitutional. I do not want to have the bill passed, but I want to have it read. It is very short.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina withdraws the resolution heretofore submitted by him and introduces a bill which, without objection, will be read in full.

The bill (S. 2926) to limit the effect of the regulations of commerce between the several States and with foreign countries in certain cases was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all fermented, distilled, or other intoxicating liquors or liquids transported into any State or Territory or remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein, shall upon arrival within the borders of the State and before or after delivery to the consignee in such State or Territory be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory enacted in the exercise of its police powers, to the same extent and in the same manner as though such liquids or liquors had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask the reference of the bill to the Judiciary Committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CAUSES OF PRESENT FINANCIAL STRINGENCY.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that resolution No. 35 may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution, at the request of the Senator from Texas.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CULBERSON on the 16th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and it is hereby, directed forthwith to inquire fully into the causes of the present financial stringency, and, at as early a date as practicable, make report thereof to the Senate, with such recommendations as in the judgment of the committee will bring speedy relief from existing conditions, prevent their recurrence, and properly conserve the legitimate business and general interests of the country.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, this resolution would have been disposed of yesterday very briefly but for the fact that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] had given notice of a speech, and action on the resolution was deferred on that account. My only purpose then and my only purpose now, so far as remarks are concerned, is to state briefly the reason for the introduction of the resolution.

Several days ago I introduced two resolutions, which taken together make inquiry with reference to the issue of Panama bonds and the 3 per cent certificates recently authorized by the Government, and with reference to the deposit of public money in national banks. By agreement those resolutions were referred to the Committee on Finance, and they have been substantially incorporated in a more general resolution, which was reported by that committee and adopted by the Senate.

While I think those two resolutions are important, the pending resolution, as I conceive, is far more so. It seeks first to discover the causes of the present financial trouble, while those two resolutions sought facts concerning mere emergency remedies; and second, it seeks to provide an adequate and a lasting rather than a temporary remedy for this condition of affairs.

Now, why should the resolution pass the Senate and receive prompt attention by the Committee on Finance? Mr. President, conditions are unprecedented in our history. The present financial calamity—and I conceive it to be one—came upon us, as it were, in a night, without warning, and apparently without industrial or commercial or economic causes. The country was prosperous, crops were good, prices were high, labor was employed, industries were in operation, money was obtainable, if not plentiful, and we had not reached the limit of national development. Suddenly, in a moment, the larger banks of the country stopped cash payments, the wave passed over the land, and there was a dearth everywhere of circulating currency. It is, in my opinion, of vital consequence to know what caused this, in order that we may provide an adequate and prompt remedy.

Various reasons have been assigned for this condition of affairs. By some it is attributed to a lack of elasticity in our system of currency. By others it is ascribed to mere fright and panic among bankers, which will speedily pass away without legislation. It is said by others, and among them I believe men high in authority, that it is due to a conspiracy on the part of those who opposed recent Congressional legislation and certain corporate reforms, but that the movement now has gotten beyond their control.

It is said finally, Mr. President, by some, that this condition is due to the machinations of stock gamblers, who would decry and destroy prosperity, who would cripple trade and commerce in order to force the money, which is therein employed in the interior, back to the East where it may be used for their speculative purposes.

Upon that point, Mr. President, I desire to have read what I regard as a remarkable editorial in the Philadelphia North American of December 9. When we consider its source, it ought at least, whatever else may be said of it, to receive the respectful attention of the other side of this Chamber.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[The North American, Philadelphia, Monday, December 9, 1907.]

PROSPERITY'S PERIL.

Fear has subsided sufficiently to make "straight talk" safe. For many weeks the newspapers of the country uniformly maintained an optimistic attitude and refrained from printing facts or comment likely to increase the prevailing commercial dread and thereby hurt the public.

There is ample evidence that the forces which plotted to destroy in a large measure the national prosperity have misinterpreted the meaning of this reticence. They regard it not as an act of restraint for the sake of the general welfare, but as an acknowledgment of their mastery.

Therefore the North American thinks the time has come when it should state to its readers some plain facts in a way that may be understood by all.

To begin with, it must be recognized that all the business troubles which threaten our prosperity are artificial—manufactured. Not one is due to natural causes. All come directly from manipulation of our bad banking and currency laws, every clause of which was framed and passed at the dictation and for the benefit of the money changers.

It is not our purpose to treat of remedies at this moment. Our wish now is to lay before our readers, in clear and simple form, the large, general, elementary truths of the conditions that confront the country.

Let it be remembered, first and always, that money is a nonproducing article, whose sole proper use is as a medium for the exchange and movement of commodities. Under just currency laws prosperity should in no way, and at no time, be affected by this medium called money.

The whole purpose of proper currency and banking laws is to provide for money of stable value, to be obtainable at the places, at the times, and in the quantities demanded by the legitimate needs of agricultural, manufacturing, and mercantile industry.

The banker is the man designated to handle the medium called money for the best interests of all. He is paid well to act as a distributing agent. That is his sole, proper function. He is a usurper whenever he attempts to play the master. His duty is to discriminate between the demands of visionaries and swindlers and those of business men. That is the limit of his rightful power. He has no right whatever to affect prosperity.

Any financial system so inflexible that in any emergency there can be suddenly removed from the channels of trade the volume of money necessary for the uninterrupted flow of commerce, whether by reason of a loss of public confidence or by the desire of the money changers, is a system that is unsound and radically wrong.

This our present financial system does. And we class first in the list of defects and dangers the fact that under our system there is a fixed, definite, known amount of money.

It is an easy matter for a layman to understand that if there were a given number of bushels of wheat or bales of cotton in this country; if it were a certainty that the amount would be the same during the next five years to come, allowing for a slight annual increase according to a known ratio, it would be the simplest matter in the world to corner and control any such staple product.

The parallel holds good. The known, fixed supply of money can be controlled and cornered with infinitely less risk and trouble than any varying product of the soil.

Wall Street knows at all times where all the money is. The money changers know just how and in what amounts the total sum is controlled by the 6,000 national banks and the 12,000 State banks, trust companies, and private banks. And they know that all these depositories obey the policies laid down by half a dozen of the large Wall street institutions which represent the great predatory interests of the country.

These banking institutions are little interested in that division of business activities which may be termed the purely commercial—the interests of the manufacturer and the merchant—which, coupled with agriculture, form not only the foundation, but all that is solid in the structure of our prosperity.

The business of the big bellwether banks is twofold. On one side it is stock gambling. On the other side it is the promotion of great enterprises and combinations that carry great flotations and bond issues, from which they take huge sums in the form of underwriting bonuses and commissions.

Estimates vary, but a conservative calculation places the amount of cash available for all business purposes in this country at two and one-half billions of dollars. When these large banking interests desire to create and sustain a bull market, it is estimated that they must have in the New York banks, or outside in readiness to bring in at short notice, one billion of the two and one-half billions total.

That is to say, that the city which forms approximately 4 per cent of the country's population requires 40 per cent of the entire cash supply to carry on gambling operations.

These banks raise and lower the price of stocks through their control of the cash of the country. They check or stimulate gambling at will by fixing the call-loan rate in New York.

At the close of the long period of industrial depression following 1893 it is estimated that Wall street commanded one and one-half billions of the money in circulation. The banks of the interior were glutted with money for which they could find no profitable local demand in the deadened state of industry and commerce.

But Wall street was ready, then as ever, to pay a small rate of interest for any amount of cash for its gamblers' uses. Throughout those years money flowed into Wall street in the stream that always sets that way when mills are closed, commerce is crippled, and industrial depression is acute.

This money was peddled to the gamblers. They bought stocks, and the upward speculative swing began under the manipulation of the money changers.

Coincidentally came the election of McKinley, the allaying of the free-silver fear, the restoration of confidence, and the resumption of industry. Natural developments made the task of the bull-market makers easy.

The unparalleled prosperity at that time gave birth to a new thing in business. The era of big bond flotations began. The money changers found that as underwriters they could pocket sure and easy unearned wealth faster than ever they could before.

They did assuredly then aid and foster prosperity in every quarter of the country. They let money out freely. They used no favoritism. They helped to stimulate business in every section.

They had not grown patriotic over night. They needed the creation of a buying power for their bond issues. The country must be put in condition to exchange its cash for such flotations. Stock prices were inflated and kept soaring in order to make the bond market.

Finally the purchasing power reached its limit. The country had absorbed all the securities it could carry. The money changers took an account of their cash and paper possessions.

They found that of the former, New York held only a few hundred millions against the debts to outside banks, to railroads, and to depositors. It was necessary to set the tide flowing backward in the old-fashioned way.

Prosperity was keeping currency busy in the sections where it was owned, and Wall street wanted that money back again to gamble with.

The money changers stood from under the stock market and let it crash upon the small fry. The flotation period had passed. What they wanted now was to throttle prosperity and bring back to Wall street the money occupied in industry. What stocks they unloaded at high prices they will buy back to sell again at the height of the next period of inflation. What securities they retained did not alter in intrinsic value.

They were ready for any crash that through consequent industrial depression would send the country's cash flooding back to Wall street.

The practicality of their plan comes back, of course, to the fact that the fixed, inflexible quantity of the currency makes their absolute control of it possible.

Eight months ago John D. Rockefeller started the cry of calamity. Others of the chief money changers took up the chorus. And for eight months the gamblers of New York prophesied disaster, preached panic, and did their utmost to create calamity.

It was not easy sailing for a time. The country was rich, busy, and content. The panic breeders were facing unprecedented conditions. Consumption was larger than production. There was no dread nor discontent; no scarcity of anything but labor.

The country refused to be frightened. Brute force must be used. The money changers used their most murderous weapon. By their control of the currency they could lock up the money of the country and make it so scarce that legitimate business could not proceed. By crippling industry and creating distrust they could cut down consumption, make goods cheap, inaugurate idleness, and cause the money glut they wanted. They used that weapon.

That is precisely the process that has been in progress. The public must not be misled into believing that these men are satisfied with what they already have accomplished. They are not.

There is but one means by which they can be checkmated and industrial depression averted. That is the passage of currency legislation by the present session of Congress which will cure the existing defects in the system.

The partial relief now being conceded to commerce comes from the interests alarmed at the public outcry and fearful that it may result in such legislation. The money changers fear that the people may inform themselves and, growing wise, will grow meddlesome.

Our conviction to-day is that these interests are striking at the life of the nation's present prosperity, and will succeed in their attempt unless the people force their representatives in Congress to pass remedial and reformatory currency legislation.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, as I said at the outset, I only intended to state quite briefly my object in introducing this resolution. As a matter of course, I do not intend at this time to discuss the causes of the present panic or to express any opinion with reference to that particular phase of the situation. It suffices my immediate purpose to emphasize the necessity for an immediate consideration of those causes by an authoritative body, to be followed by prompt and speedy action on the part of Congress, if the remedy lies within the field of Federal legislation.

The Committee on Finance of the Senate, Mr. President, is the medium through which this investigation ought to be made. Its very organization, the very purpose for which that committee was created, point to it as the committee which should make this inquiry, and the resolution provides that it shall make prompt report to the Senate as to the causes, with such recommendations on its part as will meet the present situation.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] has moved that this resolution be referred to the Committee on Finance. Of course the majority here have the power to refer it, and it will be referred. So from the 2d day of December until the 6th day of January, notwithstanding the condition of the country, there will be no action and no inquiry upon the part of that committee as to the causes of the panic or by the Senate itself. In this connection I want to read one sentence from the characteristic letter of the President to the Secretary of the Treasury, dated November 17:

> I have assurance that the leaders of Congress are considering a currency bill which will meet in permanent fashion the needs of the situation and which, I believe, will be passed at an early date after Congress convenes, two weeks hence.

Mr. President, has there been a change on the part of the Administration or has there been a change of opinion on the part of the leaders of the majority in this Chamber and the other with reference to this matter?

Statements of fact by President Roosevelt, I am pained to say, have not always been received with that confidence and enthusiasm attached to those of his illustrious predecessor, George Washington, but I take it that his statement of fact in this instance was well-founded. I have not been one of those who questioned publicly statements made by the President. It was not necessary. He has always admitted enough to provoke my intense opposition and to make me believe that his election to the Presidency and his continuance in that office is a menace to the best interests of the country. But, as I have said, I assume that his statement is correct, and yet, Mr. President, notwithstanding the country is now in the throes of a panic organized by the money power, as declared by some, although the Treasury has been stripped of its millions of cash in order to accommodate this power, the majority sit here and when a resolution is offered for an inquiry by the Finance Committee of this body into the causes and for speedy action by Congress if the remedy lies within our field, the chairman of the Committee on Finance moves to refer this resolution to that committee, where it will sleep at least until the 6th of January, and where possibly we shall have no action even after that.

Mr. President, I have called attention to my purpose, and my only purpose, in introducing this resolution, which is, that the committee before which such questions should go shall inquire forthwith into the causes of this panic, because until we know what were its causes we can not devise and provide an adequate remedy, and because speedy action is essential.

I would not ordinarily suggest the absence of a quorum, but I want the American people to know that there are some men in this Chamber who believe that prompt action is necessary, and I want a yea and nay vote upon the proposition whether this matter shall go to the Committee on Finance or whether it shall receive immediate consideration by the Senate.

I suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President, and the absence of a quorum is apparent to every one now in the Senate Chamber.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aldrich | Daniel | Kittredge | Proctor |
| Allison | Dick | Knox | Rayner |
| Ankeny | Dillingham | Long | Scott |
| Bacon | Elkins | McCreary | Smith |
| Bailey | Flint | McCumber | Smoot |
| Bourne | Foraker | McEnery | Stephenson |
| Briggs | Frazier | Nelson | Sutherland |
| Brown | Frye | Newlands | Taylor |
| Bulkeley | Fulton | Nixon | Teller |
| Burkett | Gallinger | Overman | Warner |
| Carter | Gamble | Owen | Warren |
| Clay | Hopkins | Paynter | Whyte |
| Culberson | Johnston | Perkins | |
| Cullom | Kean | Piles | |

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, has the Senator from Texas concluded his remarks?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance, and I propose to state briefly why I make the motion.

The Committee on Finance has been engaged, and is now engaged, in an inquiry into the operations of the Treasury and of the banks, and all the other facts connected with the late financial crisis. That work is absorbing the time of the committee and will have to absorb it for some time to come. The committee hope to be able to report to the Senate with reference to all the matters that are embraced in the resolution which the Senate has already adopted upon the subject and all other facts of every nature bearing upon the financial crisis. The committee hope to be able to report legislation which in their opinion will be helpful whenever these crises shall occur in the future, because experience in this and all other countries shows that periods of financial stringency do constantly recur at greater or less intervals.

For the committee, under the order of the Senate, to suspend such an inquiry, which is practical, and forthwith proceed on the inquiry suggested by this resolution, would be to relinquish the substance and pursue the shadow, because any report from the Finance Committee, or any other committee, as to the causes of the financial stringency must, in the nature of things, be more or less speculative. No committee can ascertain and no Senator would state with definiteness the precise causes of any financial crisis which has taken place in the history of this country.

Therefore I ask that this resolution may be referred to the Committee on Finance, with the view, not of preventing any inquiry which the Senate should see fit to cause to be made in this matter, but in order that we may proceed in a practical and proper manner first to ascertain the facts.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do.

Mr. CULBERSON. Do I understand the Senator to say in advance that the Committee on Finance will not make any report with reference to what has caused the present condition of affairs?

Mr. ALDRICH. I was stating that the committee will first report the facts to the Senate. If it is then the desire of the Senate that we should undertake to investigate further as to the cause, the committee will cheerfully undertake that task, but at present the time of the committee——

Mr. CULBERSON. Does not the Senator believe—in fact, does not the Senator know that the committee can act very much more intelligently with reference to the remedy when they know the cause they are providing against?

Mr. ALDRICH. That does not follow at all. It is the facts that we want with reference to this crisis—what the operations of the Treasury have been, what the operations of the banks have been, and what other facts there are in existence that bear upon the crisis as it actually took place. There may be a dozen reasons why this panic occurred which may have no bearing upon legislation.

I think every Senator who listens to me must realize that the panic did not occur on account of legislative acts or omissions and that legislation can not prevent the recurrence of similar crises in the future. We may be able to do something to ameliorate conditions, and the Committee on Finance propose to devote themselves to that task. I hope—and I believe I can assure the Senate—that very early after the Senate reassembles, following the holiday recess, the committee will be ready to report a bill which, in their judgment, will relieve the situation and take care of similar situations in the future.

This resolution proposes to direct the committee to forthwith inquire into the causes of the crisis. That would necessitate a long inquiry and an academic discourse as to what this thing or that thing had to do with the crisis. It is not practical. What the Committee on Finance propose is to make a practical inquiry with a view of suggesting further measures of relief, and I hope the Senate will not now impose an additional task upon the committee. I say this without the slightest desire to shirk the fullest investigation into everything connected with the financial crisis, and I repeat that as soon as the facts are ascertained and reported; if it is then the desire of the Senate that we should proceed to a further investigation as to the causes, the committee will cheerfully enter upon that task.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to ask the Senator if he can give any assurance that a report will be made upon this resolution if it is referred to the committee on the reassembling of the Senate after the holidays?

Mr. ALDRICH. The committee will certainly make a report upon this resolution if it is sent to the committee. The Committee on Finance have been in the habit of reporting upon all subjects referred to them, and certainly upon one of this importance the committeee will make a report at the beginning of the next session of the Senate after the holiday recess, if the Senator from Texas then desires.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] that the resolution offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

SUSPENSION OF ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, early in the session to-day the Committee on Mines and Mining reported a bill to the Senate suspending a certain provision of the statutes concerning mines. The senior Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] objected. I have discussed the matter with him and with some other Senators, and I desire to call up the bill again. I believe I can offer some amendments that will remove the objections. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 1192, reported this morning, may be again laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1192) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section numbered 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to mining claims."

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CARTER. I understood the bill to be presented was an amended bill.

Mr. TELLER. I will now offer an amendment, if the Senator will give me a chance.

Mr. CARTER. After the amendment shall have been offered, I desire to make a few observations in explanation of my position.

Mr. TELLER. I move to amend the bill in section 1, page 1, line 10, after the word "seven," by inserting the words "in the States of Colorado, California, Oregon, South Dakota, and Idaho."

Mr. President. I have conferred with representatives from those mining States, and I believe the amendment removes the objection that the Senator from Montana had to the bill. I should like to have included in the provisions of the bill the Territory of Arizona and the Territory of New Mexico, but I understand there would be objections to that, and therefore I have withheld them from the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 1, line 10, after the word "seven," it is proposed to insert "in the States of Colorado, California, Oregon, South Dakota, and Idaho."

Mr. NELSON. I should like to have the section read as it will stand if so amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section No. 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which require that on each claim located after the 10th day of May, 1872, and until patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each year, be suspended for the year 1907, in the States of Colorado, California, Oregon, South Dakota, and Idaho, so that no mining claim which has been regularly located and recorded as required by the local laws and mining regulations shall be subject to forfeiture for nonperformance of the annual assessment for the year 1907: Provided, That the claimant or claimants of any mining location in order to secure the benefits of this act shall cause to be recorded in the office where the location notice or certificate is filed on or before December 31, 1907, a notice that he or they, in good faith, intend to hold and work said claim.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, earlier in the morning I interposed an objection to the present consideration of this bill, and inasmuch as I do not intend to stand on that objection to the bill as it has been or is proposed to be amended, I feel called upon to explain briefly why I object to the bill being applied to the State of Montana.

It is well known to all Senators that the public domain of the United States is open to exploration and location under the mining laws of the United States. The person making a discovery of a vein or lode with one well-defined wall or finding gold in placer ground in sufficient quantity to justify a reasonable man in prosecuting a mining enterprise, may locate not to exceed 20 acres of ground in the latter case—that is, as to placer mines—and 1,500 feet in length along the vein or lode and 300 feet on either side thereof in case of a lode claim. The law requires that the person thus locating a claim, whether quartz or placer, shall perform at least $100 worth of work upon the claim each and every year, exclusive of the year in which the claim was located.

This requirement of annual representation is a just and proper requirement calling for continuing evidence of good faith on the part of the person who thus seeks to keep the land segregated from the public domain. One of the withering blights upon the mining country has been the evasion of this annual representation requirement. Individuals, largely for speculative purposes, locate an indefinite number of claims, frequently put them in nice position upon a prospectus page, capitalize the claims at a high valuation, and come down East and undertake to ensnare unwary persons as investors in the operation. The real miner, who seeks to develop the country and to make his way by honest work, is willing to do the $100 worth of work, because he is not keeping the claim for speculation, but with intent to develop it. Therefore, he does not limit himself to $100 worth of work, the bare requirements of the law, but he performs that and as much more as he can each year for the purpose of developing his property. Not so with the speculative element desiring to get groups of claims, and at the same time desiring to maintain them in valid form with the least possible expense.

Now, sir, we have reached the 18th day of December. All over the jurisdiction of this country every person holding a mining claim under a location is required by the 1st day of January to have performed during this current year at least $100 worth of work on his claim, or, failing so to do, he forfeits his right, and any other person desiring to develop the claim can relocate it. Every miner, in my judgment, who honestly intended on the 1st day of last January to perform representation work has performed it before this date. The miners who are seeking this relief are to a great extent the paper miners to whom I have referred, who have five, ten, twenty, or thirty claims upon which they must spend at least a hundred dollars apiece, and if they own thirty claims they will be $3,000 cash out of pocket unless this bill becomes a law. As a rule such concerns do not want to hire anybody to do the representation work, but would like to go on selling stock, and they can not keep on selling stock if the claims become forfeited for nonperformance of the representation work. Hence the desire to suspend the law.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Montana allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly; I am glad to.

Mr. SCOTT. Suppose they do not do the assessment work between now and the 1st of January; what is to prevent the same men from making relocations of their claims? It costs them nothing.

Mr. CARTER. It is a question undetermined by the courts whether such a location is a valid location or not; whether an individual derelict in the duty of representing this year can relocate the 1st of January, and thus continue indefinitely to exercise dominion over the claim in palpable evasion of the spirit of the law. That question is yet to be determined. My own judgment is that the evasion is so obvious, the subterfuge is so trifling, that no court, when the matter is fairly presented, will fail to take notice of the evasion.

I am informed by the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who has done much to create the mining law of the country and to cause its proper construction in the courts, that in the State of Colorado the class of people to whom I refer as the speculative class, with blanket claims extending over large areas of country, do not exist, but that the demand for suspension of the representation laws in that region comes from honest miners who have been unable by reason of a stringency in the money market to get the means wherewith to perform a hundred dollars' worth of work on the claims they desire to continue in existence. I do not raise any question as to a State thus situated, but I do raise the question as to the State of Montana. No such stringency exists in that State now, nor has any such stringency existed in the money market as to paralyze the industries of the State at any time recently.

In every bank in the State of Montana throughout this year, as throughout many previous years, payments in cash have been regular and uninterrupted. The recent statements called for by the Comptroller of the Currency indicate that the reserves in the banks in that State are larger than ever before, and I am sure that for every legitimate purpose of ordinary current business the banks of Montana are supplying now and will continue to supply all needful funds.

I have received within a few days a letter from a miner in Alaska, an actual, real miner, a miner who mines, who informs me that a movement was originated in and about the city of Seattle, in the State of Washington, by a lot of jawbone miners, the paper miners, the fellows who have procured through power of attorney and otherwise, individuals to locate sections of land, to get Congress to suspend the annual representation. But he says every man who is legitimately mining in that country has performed his assessment work; but speculators have not, and they are seeking relief through suspension of law. And we through this proposed law, if it were extended to that district, would place a premium upon evasion, speculation, and trifling with the laws of the United States.

The man who is required to go to a bank to obtain means to represent a mining claim is not ordinarily a miner. As a rule he is some individual who is speculating in mines. The individual who in good faith locates a mining claim and builds his cabin upon it, does his work, and he is not knocking at this Congressional door from the State of Montana for any relief, because he wants the laws enforced, to the end that the speculators and those of the speculative class who blanket the country with fake location notices may, by the enforcement of the law, be compelled to relinquish the ground which they refuse to develop, to the end that honest men may have an opportunity to do that which others fail, neglect, or refuse to do.

I am of the opinion that the proposed legislation is vicious. The requirement of the law is limited. The hour proposed for its passage is so late that the miner on the mountain side will not hear about it until 1908. He will drive his pick into the ground and hit the drill and do his work unconscious of our law. But the fellow in and about the mining center who has a bunch of claims that he has never represented, and probably never intends to represent, will be mighty glad to have the opportunity to keep those claims alive for another year, during which time he may be able to catch the sucker he missed this year.

Mr. President, again, in the State of Montana, owing to a depresssion in the copper market, 10,000 miners were thrown out of employment during the autumn. A number of these miners have gone into Nevada, some to Arizona, some to Colorado, and some elsewhere seeking employment, so that labor is abundant all through the mining region now; and I say to you that, so far as Montana is concerned, I want the men who are holding claims under a blanket compelled to employ these miners to represent for them or else let the miner locate and develop for himself.

I withdraw the objection as to the States whose Senators desire to be included, but I certainly would antagonize this bill to the end of the session if it were made general in its application.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, Colorado is the oldest mining State in the United States, unless it be California, and is the oldest in certain classes of mining and certain developments. We produce more from the mines than any other State in the Union, and we have done so for very many years. We have since 1858 produced a billion dollars of gold and silver, and that, too, with a limited population. We have not any of the blanket miners of whom the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] speaks. Under the law of the State every man who locates a claim must go on the ground and sink a shaft not less than 10 feet deep until he finds a true fissure vein. Then, under the national law, he may go on and spend $500, and then he can apply for a patent. It will cost him from two hundred and fifty to five hundred dollars to get his patent, depending largely upon where his ground is and how much it will cost him to get the surveyors in and get the surveys made. I want to say now that the expense of surveys and patenting has nearly doubled in the last five years. No man can get a patent now, and at no time since patents were issued, which is now about thirty years ago, has he been able to do so, without the expenditure, first, of $500 on the claim, and, second, the cost of the patent, which, as I say, is never less than $250. That prevents the blanket business, because every man when he files his claim must have a vein, and the miner does not find veins lying as your fingers are when you put them out in that way [indicating]. He may find a vein here, and probably he will not find another in a mile.

But the men who are wealthy, the men who are more fortunate than is the average miner, who as a rule is a poor man, and as a rule remains so to the day of his death, always secures patents. They put in the necessary work. They apply and get a patent, and then under the law they do nothing more.

I have on my table a large number of letters from actual miners, men whom I know personally to be mining men, prospectors, urging the pasage of this bill. After all it is the prospector and not the capitalist who has made that country. The prospector has blazed the way in every district in Colorado. He was the first to go there. The prospectors have first developed, and subsequently the capitalists have gone in and purchased, usually at moderate sums, and they have made great wealth out of their investments.

Within the last two or three months a mine in Colorado supposed to be practically worked out—and I venture to say that the men who originally found it and gave it a development such as to put it on the market got a mere nominal sum for it—in four days produced $286,000. The rich men who own mines have no trouble in getting patents. I have on my table a letter from a man whom I know, who says he has expended $5,000 on his claim and has never felt able to get a patent. The probability is he has a claim which has never paid the expense of working it, and there are a great many claims which have gone through that experience for many years before they finally produced anything to compensate the people who had them for the labor performed.

I have a telegram on my desk, received since this bill was objected to, from a very prominent lawyer, saying that the inquiry is very great and the anxiety considerable to know whether this bill is going to pass. I have not had any communications from the wealthy men. I have not had any from the speculators. I have had these demands from the common miner, the man who does his work when he can.

Mr. President, as a rule the miner who is not actively working his claim, who to support his family has to go out and work on somebody else's claim, leaves his claim to the last of the year. Toward the last of the year he gets together enough money to go to work on his claim and do his hundred dollars' worth of work. He usually employs some neighbor to go with him, for one man alone can do very little work on a mine, and by the time the 1st of January comes he is ready to file his certificate that he has done his work. If this work had already been done by the prospectors, as the Senator from Montana has suggested, there would be no demand for this relief.

Once before Congress passed a bill of this character which applied to all the States, and I have never heard any complaint of abuse of it, and there will not be any if we pass this bill. Of course the time is very short. Some of the Members of the other House from the mining States have assured me that they can pass the bill in the other branch if we can pass it here today.

There is a provision in this bill which I should like to have amended. It provides that by the 1st of January the claimant must file a statement that he does not intend to abandon the property, but is still claiming it. This bill will not be known to a great many miners until the 1st of January, and I want to have it amended by providing that instead of the 1st of January it shall be the 1st of February. It would be utterly useless to require the claimants to file the certificate by December 31, because they would scarcely learn that the bill had passed before the time would elapse. Many of these miners must travel many miles to the county seat before they can make this record.

I have so many inquiries that I can say truthfully I believe the real miners—and I do not mean by that the capitalist, because he does not care anything about it; I mean the men who are working their own mines—are anxious for an extension of time, and I hope this bill may pass.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado proposes an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 5, it is proposed to strike out "December 31, 1907," and insert "February 1, 1908."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I am probably one of the few Senators upon this floor who have ever done any actual mining. I have gone down in a shaft, and I have worked with the hammer and the sledge. I have climbed up the ladder and I have brought up the material with a windlass such as is used to draw water out of your wells at home. If anyone here has done any more practical mining than that, I should like to hear about it. I went to the site of the city of which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is very proud, the capital of Colorado, Denver, when there was no Denver there, when it was inhabited by the prairie dog, the rattlesnake, and the owl.

I have been interested in mining for forty-nine years, and I know that the statement which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has made as to the actual miner is true. The old fellow who goes over the mountain side looking for the piece of float and carrying on his shoulder a gunny sack containing a piece of bacon with a few hard biscuits is the man whom this bill will relieve; and the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] ought to know that, living in the State wherein he resides.

My experience in the State from which the Senator from Montana hails is that I, with some other gentlemen, paid $75,000 for a mine. We went there and spent $20,000 in developing it. We built on it a mill which cost us $25,000, and then the claim was jumped. That was my experience in Montana. [Laughter.]

The honest miner is entitled to some law to protect him in his interest. When the Senator from Montana refers to blanket claims, he is right in one sense. This country is cursed by the many mining propositions which are brought back to the East and offered to the people. I am sure there are other Senators here who have had some experience in mining. It has gone out to the country that we have had. Scarcely a day passes that some Senator does not get a letter from some man saying he has been offered such and such a property at such and such a price. Most of these are fake properties. There is nothing in them at all.

Mr. President, my friend the Senator from Montana says the actual miner can go to work and do his hundred dollars' worth of assessment; that he is prepared to do that. I say the Senator from Colorado is right. The miner has to take care of his family—his wife and little children. He postpones until the last moment doing the assessment work upon his own claim. The result this year has been that the hard times came on; many mines were shut down. The miner could not get work. He was not able to do his hundred dollars of assessment work on his claim. The Senator from Montana admitted that there is some doubt whether the miner can immediately after the 1st of January go and relocate this very claim. Then why not protect him in a general law, so that he will not have to take any chances about it. I think, Mr. President, that it is a wise and only a fair bill, and that we should pass it in the interest of the poor, honest miner, who is the man who discovers the wealth for us which lies hidden in the bowels of the earth.

If we do not pass this bill, we will do a great injustice to many honest, practical miners. Like the Senator from Colorado, I have had letters from different parts of the country where there are large mining interests, asking me to support this measure and to try to get it through before the adjournment for the holidays. I hope there is no Senator on this floor who will be so hard-hearted or so lacking in a desire to do justice to the honest miners as to oppose the bill, and that it will pass.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President it is obvious that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] is a coal miner.

Mr. SCOTT. I never in my life mined a piece of coal.

Mr. CARTER. His experience as a miner in our country was evidently unfortunate. I think he needed a guardian before he made the venture in that region, because only the most unsophisticated person will take a mining claim subject to relocation and invest $100,000, or some such sum as the Senator did, and then in addition build a mill upon it. He actually built a mill on a piece of land for which there was no outstanding title at all except in the United States, and somebody picked that title up before the Senator thought of locating the ground upon which the mill was built.

Mr. SCOTT. It was located.

Mr. CARTER. We can not be responsible for untutored, unsophisticated persons coming into the country who will not exercise that ordinary care and prudence necessary to the guarding of serious interests.

The Senator suggests that this bill is particularly applicable to the honest miner. There is not a miner to-day—and the Senator is familiar with conditions—having an individual claim who has not performed his representation work for this year long, long since. Nobody who intends to represent a claim puts off the work until the holidays of Christmas time. The representation work is generally done in the days of the autumn when the weather is best and the conditions most favorable. So this bill as now proposed to be passed will only be applicable to those persons who did not intend to represent their claims at all. No one will contend that a man will defer the expenditure of money until the mountains are covered with snow, and then seek between the 20th of December and the end of the month to do his representation work.

Let us see what this means to the men outside of Colorado, where they have a stringent local law. If on the 1st of January, 1906, an individual, bent on speculation, located fifty mining claims in a good mineral country—in Nevada for instance—he was not required to do any assessment work during that year at all, because that was the year during which the location was made. Now we propose to exempt him from the performance of work during 1907, and consequently the ground will not be subject to relocation until January 1, 1909. Thus if this bill becomes a law he can hold that ground for three long years, during 1906 and 1907 and 1908, without performing a dollar's worth of work, his possessory right being protected by an act of Congress, when there are hundreds and hundreds of men willing and anxious to enter upon unlocated ground to develop it in good faith.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Montana that certainly we will have nothing to do with either Montana or Nevada under the bill as it now stands. I do not know what the condition may be in Montana or in Nevada.

Mr. CARTER. I beg the Senator's pardon. I was undertaking to give some instruction to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT], who seemed to be in need of it, and in order not to further delay the matter I will yield the floor to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], who desires to make some observations.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I do not intend to object to the immediate consideration of the pending bill, but inasmuch as originally I was inclined to favor it and inasmuch as the sentiment in my own State in reference to it is somewhat divided, I think I ought not to permit it to come to a vote without very briefly stating why I am opposed to it.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] called attention to the fact that we had a precedent for this sort of legislation, referring to the act which was passed in 1893. In the first place, as I recall it, that bill was passed as early as September of that year. It was passed at a special session. So the miners were advised of it some two or three months before it was necessary to complete the assessment work. It is proposed that this legislation shall be passed by both Houses and signed by the President, if it shall become a law, within twelve days, perhaps within ten days, of the period when the assessment labor should be completed. As the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] has very well observed, the miners, generally speaking, have already performed their assessment work, and those who will be benefited by the proposed law in the main—there are some exceptions, perhaps—are the men who would not do the work in any event; most of them men who would not do the work if there was no financial stringency and if they had ample means with which to do the work.

As indicating the sentiment among the miners of my own State with reference to this matter, I desire to send to the Secretary's desk and have read a remonstrance sent to me from Kimberly, one of the mining sections of my State, protesting against the passage of this proposed law. The remonstrance is numerously signed by miners and prospectors.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Hon. GEORGE SUTHERLAND,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

Whereas it has been brought to our notice that GEORGE A. BARTLETT, of Nevada, is about to propose the introduction of a bill in the coming session of Congress for the purpose of suspending assessment work upon mining claims in the State of Utah for this year; and

Whereas the citizens of Kimberly, Piute County, Utah, who are all engaged in practical mining and prospecting, are cognizant of the state of affairs existing in reference to mining matters; and

Whereas it is apparent that nearly all prospectors and miners in this vicinity have already completed the annual labor required by law under the mining laws upon mining claims; and

Whereas we are unanimous in the opinion that the suspension of annual assessment work would result in great injury to the legitimate miner and prospector, and redound to the benefit of the speculator, land grabber and large property owner only; and

Whereas elimination of one year's assessment work upon mining claims would result in the poor miner's and prospector's strict compliance with the provisions of the requirements of the laws appertaining to patenting of mining claims; but, the corporation or speculator could, as in 1893, proceed to patent upon the expenditure of $400 worth of development work; and

Whereas its enactment would result in the establishment of a bad precedent, inasmuch as it would be justifiable for any corporation, community, or association to petition Congress for relief from taxation, tariff, or other conditions imposed by the Government: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the citizens of Kimberly, Piute County, Utah, protest most emphatically and strenuously against the introduction, adoption, or passage of the proposed bill: And be it further

Resolved, That we respectfully petition Hon. GEORGE SUTHERLAND to use every legitimate effort to prevent the passage of the same in Congress.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the petition which has been read is only illustrative of a number of others which I have received from miners in the State of Utah. It is fair to say that I have received some communications upon the other side of the question; and if I believed that the majority sentiment in my own State among mining men were in favor of the passage of this proposed law, I should vote for it. But the petitions which I have received upon the other side of the question are very few in comparison with those of a character similar to the one which has just been read.

I think the law is, as the Senator from Montana has said, a very wise one. To begin, a man who takes up a mining claim is permitted to do it without paying the Government of the United States anything for it at all. The law was passed originally for the purpose of developing the mineral resources of the United States, and in harmony with that idea the law provided that each locator of a mining claim should do $100 worth of assessment work each year. If that law is to be frittered away for any light reason, the beneficent effect of the law, the real object of the law, mainly, to develop the mineral resources of the United States, will be defeated.

It seems to me that the conditions which exist to-day are not parallel with the conditions which existed in 1893. That was a period when there was no money. As the conditions are now money is hoarded, but there was then no money in the country; people were suffering for the real necessaries of life. But to-day there is an abundance of money in the country; it is simply not in circulation. Any person in my own State who has property of merit, who has means, is able to employ labor to do this small amount of assessment work. I think the proposed legislation ought not to pass.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, relief measures are obviously proposed and enacted for the benefit of a limited number of people. This measure is not intended to benefit the prosperous, the capitalists who may own a number of mines, but rather that remnant of the people who have been unable up to this time to perform the annual labor required by the law to be performed upon a mining claim. So it is not proper to discuss it from the standpoint of the land grabber, or of the corporation, or of the owner of a large number of mines, but rather from the standpoint of those who have been cornered, so to speak, by the financial situation which exists throughout the country.

It is very probable that the larger number of those who would be benefited by the enactment of this law would consist of those who in the absence of the law would lose their mining claims. It is very probable that it is that class of people who would benefit by it, because those who are independent enough to be able to perform their annual labor have probably already performed it. But it is one of the highest functions of the law and of government to provide for and protect the weak and helpless. These people are not helpless because of any act of their own or of any conditions to which they contributed. They are helpless because of conditions over which they have no control. They may have in the banks the proceeds of their year's labor in the earning of wages and yet not be able to make it available for the purpose of enabling them either to do the work themselves or to employ another to do the work.

Now, I realize the importance of forwarding the development of the country by the performance of the annual labor upon the mining claims to the fullest extent, but I also realize the importance of protecting this class of people against misfortune for which they are not responsible. Those are the conditions and circumstances that have been brought about without any contribution upon their part. Therefore I am willing to support this measure. There are two sides to it. Were it a measure proposed earlier in the season, I would be more likely to oppose it than I am to-day, because there are a large number of miners, laboring men, in our mining States who depend for their winter's grubstake upon the labor which they do for others under the provision of the law which we are seeking to suspend.

I have often been appealed to by that very class of our laboring men against the suspension of the operation of the law requiring the annual work to be performed, on the ground that it would deprive them of an opportunity to earn some money that would enable them to live during the winter which they would be unable to earn were it not for this class of labor. But coming so late in the year as this proposed measure comes to us, those circumstances and those conditions do not apply. The people to whom the misfortunes of this period have not attached have already done their annual labor. The rich corporations have already performed their annual labor. Those who have not performed it are those who would not be able to perform it, and, doubtless, were no relief given to them they would lose their claims.

For that reason I am inclined to support this bill. I am inclined to support it for the very reasons that are urged by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] against supporting it. I find sufficient ground within those reasons for supporting it.

Mr. PILES obtained the floor.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PILES. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. In order to put this bill upon the basis suggested by the Senator from Utah, to the end that it may prove beneficial only to individual mine owners who are not seeking to control large areas of country, I propose this amendment:

Provided, That this act shall only apply to one mining location held, owned, or claimed by any individual, and shall not apply to any location or claim held or owned by any incorporated company.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator from Montana applicable to the proposed amendment. It is rarely that a single individual owns an entire mining claim. It is once in twenty times that the prospector is the sole owner of the claim that he locates. It is the rule that he has from one to a number of partners interested, either the parties who have supplied him with provisions in order that he may prospect, or other parties, prospectors perhaps like himself or business men who for one reason or another have an interest in it. In that case how would it be possible to apply this amendment to the conditions that confront us, providing that only one claim to an individual should be represented by the certificate, when perhaps one individual might have a very small interest in a large number of claims. It seems to me that the amendment would not be applicable to the conditions which confront us.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from Idaho, I understand, does not object to the portion of the proposed amendment which prohibits the application of this relief legislation to incorporated companies.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think it should apply to individuals.

Mr. CARTER. I will frame the amendment so as to exclude only corporations from the exemption.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Montana that he add "or nonresidents of the State in which the assessment work is to be done."

Mr. CARTER. I will not delay the Senator from Washington further at present.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, I simply rise to correct the impression which the Senator from Montana might create in his remarks in line with some letter which he says he received from some miner from Alaska with respect to a movement on the part of the mine owners in the city of Seattle to have the law suspended.

I may say in this connection that being a resident of the city of Seattle I feel quite confident that if any such movement were on foot I would have had some notice of it before this time. A very large number of miners coming from Alaska winter in the city of Seattle and return in the spring to do their work.

I have had but three letters on this subject from the State of Washington, and those were with respect to suspending the assessment work in the State of Nevada. I took occasion in replying to those letters to say that was a question which should be presented to the Senators from that State.

I desire to say in behalf of the mining men who congregate in the city of Seattle during the winter, and some of whom reside there permanently, that the statement of the gentlemen who wrote to the Senator from Montana with respect to a movement of the character mentioned in his remarks is wholly without foundation. There is no such movement there, and I have heard no wish expressed that the assessment work should be suspended in the district of Alaska or in any other place except in the State of Nevada.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER]. I agree with a great deal that he has said in reference to the bill, but there has been considerable agitation in the West in reference to an extension of the time of doing assessment work on mining claims, and a great many honest miners have refrained from doing their work upon receiving letters from various Representatives and Senators to the effect that there was a possibility that this bill would pass before the first of the year.

If the miners in the West had not relied upon the suggestion made that the bill would pass, I would oppose the bill as far as it relates to California. But believing, as I do, that the miners in the West have relied upon Congress acting, and that they have not done their assessment work, I have asked that California be included within the States to which the act should apply.

I think it would be a great injustice if the amendment suggested by the Senator from Montana should be adopted, for the reason that the mining companies have refrained from doing their assessment work, as miners have in many instances, and if we fail to pass a bill at this time the large mine owners, as well as the small operators who have been depending upon such a bill being passed, will lose their mining claims.

The fact that at this time money is available with which to do this work is not an answer to the proposition that for the past thirty or forty days during which this question has been agitated they have been unable to obtain the necessary money for that purpose. I hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana will not be adopted, but that the bill as amended on the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] will be passed.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there is another reason, it seems to me, why the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] should not be adopted. It is purely class legislation. What reason can any man give why three men who have formed a corporation should not be protected while three others who have a joint ownership in a mine should be protected? Why should we make a law for one class and prohibit the benefits to men of another class simply because they were incorporated? Nor is that the greater weakness in this proposed legislation. Why should the Senator strike at the nonresidents of a State? It is the property of the United States, and every citizen has a right to it.

Mr. CARTER. I have not favored such a distinction.

Mr. McCUMBER. I refer to the suggestion that was made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. CARTER. I am glad the Senator has made that correction, because I am not in sympathy with the proposal to discriminate against the nonresidents of a State. I think they should be accorded the same treatment accorded citizens of a State in matters of this kind.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, if the Senator would not discriminate between residents and nonresidents, why should he discriminate between a joint company or a partnership and a corporation? One is composed of no more members than the other.

Mr. CARTER. I discriminate for this reason: The legislation is said to be for the relief of miners who are alleged to be unable to comply with the law requiring annual representation of their claims because of the existence of a financial panic. As to the incorporated company, wherein the chief vice of the extensive system of speculative location rests, I think the appeal for relief comes with very poor grace.

Mr. McCUMBER. I, for the life of me, can see no reason for the differentiating between the one kind of company and the other. The people who are to be benefited after all are individuals, and you can not benefit a corporation without benefiting the individuals who constitute the corporation. If a corporation consists of two or three or more individuals, each one has just as much right to have his interests protected by law as any other character of incorporated association.

As has already been suggested by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], nearly all of these claims are now owned by a number of individuals. As he says, it is seldom the case that a mine is owned by a single individual. It is owned by several individuals. What difference, then, does it make whether they have a joint ownership or whether they have an interest in common by reason of being members of a corporation? They may have just as much trouble in getting labor during these hard times. They must feel the stringency of the money market just exactly the same as a private individual. For one I am opposed to making one kind of a law for one man and another kind of a law for another.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I requested the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to include the State of Oregon among the States that were to have the benefit of this bill. I did so because I have received numerous petitions from men who are engaged in mining and from mining centers and localities earnestly urging this character of legislation.

Personally I do not live in a mining region, but I know something about the mining districts within the State in which I live, and I know the localities from whence these petitions came. In some instances I know the individuals, and I am satisfied from the representations made that some legislation of this character is necessary in justice to these people. I know that the banks have not been paying out money in many localities in the State, and I know that under the rules whereby they paid out any money, money could not be secured for this class of work at least from many banks, and therefore people were subjected to this condition. They could not get the money to carry on the necessary work or for preserving and protecting their rights, and it seems to me it is but just that Congress afford this slight measure of relief under the circumstances.

It may be true, and I do not doubt that it is true, that persons unworthy of aid will share in the benefits of this bill. But I am not prepared to say that those unworthy persons are confined to any particular class. The Senator from Montana seems to think that all the unworthies will be included under the head of corporations. I have not yet reached that stage of evolution in my theories of government which will lead me to believe that it is a crime to form corporations, to own stock in a corporation or to be a member of one. I know of no reason why if this law is suitable and proper to be extended to one class of property owners it should not be extended to the other. We know very well that when men take up mining claims, perhaps in the majority of cases, at least in a very great percentage of instances, several people put them in the shape of a corporation and own them.

As the Senator from Idaho has well said, in most instances several people own an interest in a mine. They put it in control as a corporation because they can handle it better in that condition. They are no more dishonest after they have put their property in the shape of a corporation than they were before. There is no reason why if this measure of relief should have been extended to them before it ought not to be extended to them after they have placed their property in a corporation, each holding a share in the corporation as representing his share in the property. Nor do I believe any distinction should be made between the resident and the nonresident. Under our laws nonresidents are entitled to take up mining claims within the State, and taking them up, they should be treated exactly the same as residents.

I hope this bill will be passed. I have received very many urgent messages asking for it from my State, and I believe it is proper. Surely no very great injury can result from it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I can not allow this bill to pass without some protest and an effort to secure adoption of the amendment I offered for the purpose of discriminating against a given form of legal organization known as "incorporated mining company." That side issue shall not be obtruded here. The basic purpose urged as the ground upon which this bill should pass is that struggling miners holding mining claims are unable, by virtue of the financial stringency, to comply with the law, and that therefore the law should be, in their behalf, suspended. Who is here to assert that any incorporated mining company, incorporated as they usually are for millions of dollars, is unable by reason of financial stringency to expend a hundred dollars on a mining claim in order to continue the title in valid form? If the Senator will say that he has, in good faith, information to the effect that any incorporated company is now in the condition of the so-called struggling miner—who has performed his work, by the way—then I will withhold this amendment; but I am not in favor of passing a bill for the relief of the stock peddlers who do not develop mines, but develop money out of the public by means of fake mining locations on which no expenditures are made. That class of people are a curse to the mining country, and they are a scourge to the people from whom they solicit subscriptions. The legitimate mining companies having property to sell are developing the property in good faith and performing their representation work. I think it would be exceedingly unfortunate for the Congress to pass a law which would relieve from obligation to perform assessment work on a mining claim these paper concerns who have located mining claims, gotten out their prospectuses, failed to do even a hundred dollars' worth of work on any claim, who are peddling their stock through the country, pocketing the profit from the operation, and doing nothing on the ground which is supposed to be the basis of the operation. If there is a company so far in the need of relief as to require a bill from Congress to relieve it from the expenditure of a hundred dollars, the quicker its stockholders are advised of its wretchedly impecunious condition, the quicker the innocent public will be protected from the inroads of that corporation upon the savings of the people.

I submit this amendment, sir, as applied only to incorporated companies. I think it is fair and just; and if any Senator thinks a corporation requires relief, as does the miner in this case, I would be glad to have him specify the company, for it would be a matter of delightful public information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of section 1 the following:

Provided further, That this act shall not apply to any mining location owned in whole or in part by any incorporated company.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes appear to have it. The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. CARTER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. CARTER. May I inquire what disposition was made of the amendment offered by me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana was rejected upon a viva voce vote. The Senator from Montana then demanded a yea-and-nay vote, but the call for the yeas and nays was not seconded by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state that he desired to appoint the gentleman from New York, Mr. LAW, on War Claims at No. 4, and Mr. WALDO upon Claims, the place he has heretofore had; but in the clerical work of making up the lists the names were interchanged. The correction will now be made. The Chair thinks that is the only clerical error and desires to call attention to the fact that he interrupted the Clerk while reading the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, thinking there was a mistake, but there was none, so that it will stand as arranged and as first reported.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS EXECUTIVE PAPERS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting a schedule of papers and documents not needed in the transaction of business and having no permanent value or historical interest.

In accordance with the law the Chair announces the following appointment of members of the Joint Select Committee for the Disposition of Useless Executive Papers:

ARTHUR L. BATES, of Pennsylvania, and JOSHUA F. C. TALBOTT, of Maryland.

SALARIES OF OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House joint resolution 58, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out "nineteenth" and insert "twenty-first."

Amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1907, on the 21st day of said month."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will sign the joint resolution for the pay of officers and employees which has just been agreed to and laid before the House, the Committee on Enrolled Bills not having had time to report upon it.

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENT.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. WALDO of New York to the Committee on War Claims.

PURCHASE AND DISTRIBUTION OF SEEDS.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, by the direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I submit the following privileged report and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. From the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] reports the resolution (H. J. Res. 66), making appropriations to supply deficiency in the appropriations for the purchase and distribution of valuable seeds, and asks unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That to supply a deficiency occasioned by the destruction of the seed warehouse used by the Department of Agriculture in the city of Washington November 6, 1907, in the appropriation "Purchase and distribution of valuable seeds," including each and every object authorized by law and specified in the appropriation of $238,000, except the provision for the purchase of foreign seed, under this title in the "Act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908," approved March 4, 1907, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, what is the proposition?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], from the Committee on Appropriations, reports the joint resolution which has just been read, with the request that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] if it is possible to have ten minutes of general debate. My colleague from the First District of Georgia [Mr. EDWARDS] desires to make a few remarks to the committee if that much time for debate can be given to him.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] I would say it is entirely possible to have ten minutes, or any length of time that the House may see fit, but under the circumstances I could not consent to general debate on this proposition, for the reason that I understand that the Senate will not after to-day transact any business.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The Senate has adjourned until Saturday, Mr. Speaker, I understand.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is very necessary that this measure shall be put through.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. They could not put it through to-day.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. EDWARDS], colleague of the gentleman who has made the suggestion [Mr. BARTLETT], desires to address the House on a bill which he has introduced. It is not at all germane to the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I simply want to say that I desire to call up the privilege resolution in reference to the distribution of rooms and the manner of the allotment of the same, and I hope there will be no protracted debate which will send Members of the House away before that resolution is called up, because it certainly will be to the convenience of the Members to be able to consider that resolution while they are here.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, my request was for no protracted debate that would send anybody away that I know of, as the gentleman from Illinois suggests.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from Georgia will permit me, I will suggest this: That if he will ask unanimous consent that his colleague may address the House for ten minutes upon this joint resolution or upon any subject he sees fit to talk about, I think the House will grant that request, and that will relieve me.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Pending that request, Mr. Speaker, for unanimous consent, I ask that my colleague [Mr. EDWARDS] from the First District of my State be permitted to address the House in general debate for ten minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman if he will yield me a couple of minutes or a minute when we get into debate?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will yield to the gentleman a minute or two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary for me to occupy the time of the House in explaining the necessity for this deficiency appropriation. It is generally known to Members of the House that on the 6th of last month the seed storehouse used by the Agricultural Department for storing and making up packages of seed for distribution was destroyed by fire. At that time there were about 8,000,000 packages of seed stored there and about 90 per cent of the bulk seed stored there. In consequence of the fire these packets of seed were destroyed and a large quantity of the bulk seed. The Department usually purchases these seeds under contract. The time being so short, it was necessary for them to endeavor to get seeds from the seed men, which they have succeeded in doing, and at the request of the Department these seed men have shipped the seed to the Agricultural Department in Washington, or a sufficient quantity of seed to make up the loss occasioned by the fire. The Department, however, has not accepted these seed, and can not accept them until Congress authorizes the purchase and appropriates the money to pay for them, and in order that the seed may be distributed in those States where it is necessary to distribute them at this time, the Department of Agriculture must secure this authorization and appropriation before the holiday recess; and for that reason the Committee on Appropriations have reported this joint resolution at this time.

I now yield one minute to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I was in my office at work all day, except the time taken up in making a call to see the President on some official business and the Secretary of the Navy. I picked up the Washington Herald this morning, and find this:

JOHN WESLEY GAINES leads charge on new House Appropriation Committee.

After referring to a noise "that might have suggested post-Thanksgiving football enthusiasm," etc., in or near the committee room, the paper says:

It was only the free-seed contingent, led by JOHN WESLEY GAINES, executing a mass play on the Committee on Appropriations.

I brand the writer of that as a liar and the statement as false, absolutely, Mr. Speaker. [Applause.]

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, early in my life, while toiling upon a farm way down in Georgia, I purposed in my heart that if I ever was in a position where I could say or do anything in the interests of the farmers, the backbone of our country, I would take advantage of the opportunity. It is therefore with pleasure and pride that my voice is raised to-day in this my first speech in Congress in behalf of that great class of our most useful citizens and in the interest of my own State.

On the first day of this session of Congress, the day that I was sworn in as a Representative, I introduced the following bill:

A bill (H. R. 575) for the distribution of the cotton-tax fund.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to pay out the money constituting the cotton-tax fund, now held in the Treasury of the United States of America and known as the cotton-tax fund, the levy and collection of which was held to be illegal by the Supreme Court of the United States, to the several States from which the said illegal tax was levied and collected; each of said States to be paid back the sum that was so collected, with interest thereon at the rate of 3 per cent, to be calculated from the time of the collection thereof; the same to be used by the several States to which said funds are to be paid as may be determined and provided by the legislatures of the said several States sharing in this distribution.

This bill has been referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered printed.

I want it distinctly understood at the outset that I am not particular as to the form of the bill that the committee might report back to the House, since it has for its one general purpose the distribution of this fund and in the right way. There have been one or two other bills introduced along this same line, the forms of which are a little broader than the one introduced by myself. It is not my purpose for a moment to quibble about the form. What we want, and what I sincerely hope we can get, is an equitable distribution of this enormous sum of money, that it might, if possible, go back to the parties from whom it was exacted, or to their heirs if it is impossible to pay it back to the parties themselves. Of course it will be impossible to pay it back to the parties in hundreds of cases, for many of the parties from whom it was collected are now dead.

Before going further, I wish to cite the act under which this tax on cotton was collected. The levy and collection of this tax was authorized by an act of Congress, July 1, 1862—more readily found in the Twelfth Statutes, page 465, providing for the levy and collection of a certain amount on each pound of raw cotton. In accordance with this act, which was the first on the subject, the enormous sum of $68,072,388.99 was collected. By reading this act it is clear that it was aimed at the cotton producers of the cotton-growing States. If not aimed at the cotton growers, why was the tax not levied upon the manufactured article, so that the burden of the tax would have been more evenly distributed upon all wearing articles produced out of the cotton raised in the United States? It is clear that it was intended as a punitive measure instead of a measure to raise revenue. By reference to the date of the act authorizing the levy of this tax, it will be remembered that at that time none of the cotton-growing States had representation in the Congress passing the act. It was, in truth, a taxation without representation.

Raw cotton was found in some of the States that do not grow or produce cotton, and the tax was of course levied upon it. But don't you know that the tax on each pound of cotton was figured out, the farmer paying the tax, before the buyers bought the cotton? This enormous sum, then, was taxed out of the farmers of the cotton-growing States in the South and Southwest.

I requested and obtained from the Treasury Department a statement showing the amount collected under this tax on cotton, showing the States that would share in this distribution under my bill, and the years in which the collections were made, and it is as follows:

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAX RECEIPTS.

This act was in operation until February 3, 1868, as appears in the Fifteenth Statutes, page 34, when it was repealed by an act of Congress, and which repealing act reads as follows: "That all cotton grown in the United States after the year 1867 shall be exempt from internal tax," etc. This repealing act was not passed until protest after protest had been registered against this unjust discrimination. It was contended by the ablest lawyers in the country that the act authorizing the tax was not only an unfair measure, but was unconstitutional. The Constitution provides in Article I, section 2, clause 3, that "Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States." Section 8, clause 1 of Article I, provides that "The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States, but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States." Section 9, clause 4 of Article I of the Constitution further provides: "No capitation or other direct tax shall be laid unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken." Clause 5 of that same article and section says: "No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State." The fifth amendment to the Constitution provides: "Nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation." The tenth amendment to the Constitution provides that "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people."

Remedy was asked through the courts against the enforcement of this cotton tax, but at that time even our courts were blinded by sectional hatred and could not be made to see the clearness of the Constitution on this point, or if they were made to see it certain it is they were not made to give an opinion that would correctly construe the Constitution and mete out justice. It was not until years after that unfortunate war between the States that our Supreme Court rendered a decision that means that the act of July 1, 1862 (12 Stats., 465), under which these amounts were collected, was unconstitutional. It means that if it means anything at all. It is possible that the court did not have the cotton act in mind when this decision was rendered. The case that I refer to is to be found in the One hundred and fifty-eighth United States Reports, page 601. Among other things this case holds:

> In distributing the power of taxation the Constitution retained to the United States the absolute power of direct taxation, but granted to the Federal Government the power of the same taxation upon condition that in its exercise such taxes should be apportioned among the several States according to numbers, and this was done in order to protect the States, who were surrendering to the Federal Government so many sources of income, the power of direct taxation, which was their principal remaining resource.
> Taxes on real estate being indisputably direct taxes, taxes on the rents or income of real estate are equally direct taxes.
> Taxes on personal property or on the income of personal property are likewise direct taxes.

In the light of these quotations from the Constitution itself, as to the meaning of which I can not see how there could have ever been any honest doubt, and in the light of this decision of the Supreme Court, it is clear that the acts authorizing this tax are unconstitutional and invalid. The horrible fact remains, however, that our National Government has without authority of law exacted from a large number of her citizens money that it has no right to. The fact also remains that this money, despite the unconstitutionality of the act under which it was collected, is still withheld from the owners thereof.

It was a Republican Congress that saw the injustice of this tax and passed an act on February 3, 1868, repealing the tax on cotton. I can not think there was much doubt in the minds of the members of that Congress as to the constitutionality of the act. It is my opinion that they just simply knew that it was unconstitutional and unjust, and hence repealed it. I can not think there is a man under the sound of my voice, no matter what quarter of the country he is from, who is to-day honestly of the opinion that the tax on cotton was constitutional. It was a Republican Congress that imposed the tax, it was a Republican Congress that repealed it, now why not a Republican Congress go a little further and make restitution by disbursing this fund to those, or their heirs, who have been wronged by that tax? [Applause.]

It is not my purpose to open any memory of that unfortunate war. It is not my purpose to argue this matter from a sectional standpoint. Such arguments are wrong. [Applause.] I don't want it considered from a sectional standpoint. To evade that I have made the provisions of this bill such that the Government can pay the amount collected from each State back to the State from which it was collected and let that State say through its legislature what shall be done with the fund. In my State I am sure it would be given back to those people from whom it was collected, if they are to be found, and if not, to their heirs; and if there can be found neither the party from whom it was collected nor their heirs, then to the Confederate veterans or used for educational purposes. [Applause from minority.]

The amount levied upon and collected from citizens of Georgia is more than that of any other State. The amount that would go to Georgia under a distribution of this kind would be $11,897,094.98. I have introduced this bill believing that I can in no better way serve my people than to aid in this movement that would mean the return of $11,897,094.98 to the pockets of Georgia's citizens, which was wrongfully taken from them and which is being wrongfully withheld from them. [Applause from minority.]

It will be an easy matter to find out from whom the tax was collected. That information can or ought to be gotten from the Treasury Department; and it will be possible, I am sure, to return this money to the parties, or their heirs, from whom it was collected.

It is now pretty generally conceded by all fair-minded men from every quarter of the country that this tax act was unconstitutional and unjust. It is generally conceded, I say, by fair-minded men from every quarter of the country that the legislation authorizing this tax was not only wrong in principle but wrong in expediency. [Applause.]

Why cotton was selected out of the numerous other agricultural products for this taxation has never been fully explained, though it is generally believed that it was aimed at the Southern States and no doubt was thought to be a good way in which to punish the Confederate veterans, who came mainly from the cotton-growing States, and upon whose shoulders the weight of this unjust taxation fell.

As I have already said, it is not my purpose to inject into this argument any sectionalism or to say anything that will awaken old memories or prolong sectional feeling growing out of that unfortunate but inevitable war between the States. I am as loyal to my State and to the Southland as any of the sons of that section. I am the son of a private Confederate soldier, who with his colleagues in arms fought for principles that they thought were right. [Applause.] I am not now, nor never shall be, ashamed of my heritage. On the other hand, while I love the South and her noble heroes and patriotic sons, I have every respect for the heroes who wore the blue, and who also fought for principles that they thought were right. [Renewed applause.] The fate of war, and superior numbers, decreed that the Union should be perpetuated. Let us hope that it will be perpetuated for all time. That war makes up the saddest chapter in our country's whole history from its foundation to the present time. We are all glad that it is in the past, and we are all glad that we are a reunited people forever. [Applause.] Above all else we are glad that we are Americans and that we have the grandest country in all the world. [Renewed applause.]

It is now forty-two years since the close of that unfortunate war between the States, and without any feeling save a love for my country and its whole people, as a native Georgian I have introduced this bill to right a wrong growing out of the passions of that dark hour in our country's history. [Applause.] The Government should refund the amount that was arbitrarily collected from a single article of our agricultural wealth and which is now conceded to have been an unconstitutional use of power. Our nation was founded upon principles of honesty and justice. We love to think of our Government as the embodiment of honesty and justice. [Applause.] But, Mr. Speaker, how are we to think of it in this light if it continues to hold this sum of money that it clearly has no right to? What are other people to think of us? This is all a part of our records and of our history. It would not only be the right thing to do, but a beautiful thing to do, for the Congress of the United States to lay aside all memory of the war between the States, forget that imaginary Mason and Dixon's line, just remember that we are one people, of one country, with a general purpose to do right, and refund by an act this sum of money to its rightful and lawful owners. The people of the South, who are perhaps more largely interested in this fund than people from any other part of the country, are as loyal and patriotic to the Government as those of any other part of the country, those who wore the blue not even excepted. Then why should this money that was exacted as a punitive measure still be held by the Government? [Applause.]

Georgia's condition at the time of the collection of this tax, as now, was that of leadership in wealth and progress among her Southern sisters—the elements which conspired to win for her the proud title of the "Empire State of the South." But no matter what may have been her wealth then, or what it may be now, she is not for that reason to be debarred from the equities which obtain in similar cases. She was wrongfully taxed in the sum of $11,897,094.98, and my object is to obtain a return of that money to the State, to be refunded to its rightful owners. [Loud applause.]

I shall digress for a few moments to present a few statistics showing the comparative condition of the State in the years 1860 and 1900 and 1905–6. Her cotton production in 1860 was 701,840 bales, which had increased in 1906 to 1,670,448, being excelled in the latter year in cotton production by the single State of Texas. In 1906 Georgia produced 12 per cent of the entire cotton crop of the country. In the same year she produced of sea-island cotton 13,888,700 pounds, or 57 per cent of the entire crop. Her cotton-seed products had a value of $10,762,331. Her other productions in 1860 and her present productive power are best shown by the following parallel columns for 1860 and 1905:

Thus, despite the ravages of war, Georgia is found in line, like the rest of the Southern States, loyal and patriotic to the flag, doing full and energetic duty as a proud State of the American Union. In the matter of the cotton tax she and her sister States that felt the levy of the tax have been wronged, and it is but right that a great country like the United States should proceed to do those thus wronged full and exact justice.

I call this to your attention at this time so that if my bill is favorably reported back to the House by the committee to which it has been referred you will fully understand my position and my reasons for the introduction of the bill. I hope that the committee will act favorably upon my bill, or some other bill along the same line, and that it will be referred back to the House for its consideration; and I hope that justice will no longer be blinded by sectional hatred, but that you will realize the wrong that has been inflicted upon your brothers, and that it will be your pleasure to give the bill your support, and thereby return to those from whom this tax was collected every cent of their money, with interest, that the records and history of our great common country may be cleared up, and that it may be said without any reservation or exception that our Government is not only truly good and great, but scrupulously honest and just to its citizens. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WALLACE] to make a request.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print remarks in the RECORD on the subjects of income and inheritance tax, good roads, and the tariff in relation to the farmer and home builder.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAWNEY a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

LOCATION OF GRANT MEMORIAL.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution No. 77.

Resolved, etc., That the operation of the provision of law authorizing the location of the Grant Memorial upon the unoccupied portion of the Botanical Garden be, and the same is hereby, suspended until the 1st day of May, 1908.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I object.

Mr. McCALL. I will ask the gentleman to reserve his objection for a moment.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am willing to reserve the objection, retaining the right to make the objection.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word to explain the purpose of the resolution. The provision of law referred to authorizes the location of the Grant memorial upon any unoccupied portion of the Botanical Garden. Some time during the last autumn operations were begun to locate the memorial upon what many believed to be an occupied portion of the Botanical Garden, contrary to the spirit of the act. The place where it was proposed, and is now proposed, to put the memorial is occupied by the main sewer running from the Capitol; but more important than that, it is occupied by some very beautiful historical trees. I think as one of the prime objects of a botanical garden is to cultivate trees, that it might well be said there is an occupancy of that portion of the gardens. There is an unoccupied portion of the gardens where this monument can be placed. It may be that this construction of the law is not correct. I believe, however, that the matter should be inquired into by Congress. As a result of the protests made, operations were suspended until the assembling of Congress, with the purpose of giving it an opportunity to act. But the committees had not been appointed in this House until to-day, and we are so soon to take a recess that practically we will have no opportunity to act until after the holidays.

I believe that this is a very important matter. I think that the unnecessary destruction of beautiful trees would be an act of vandalism, and I think the Committee on the Library should have an opportunity carefully to consider the matter, and I promise that it will do so immediately after the holidays and report to the House. I imagine that the gentlemen having this matter in charge will not proceed in view of what has been done and the inability of Congress to act on the subject and in the condition in which things are now; but in order to make certain, I have introduced this resolution, and have asked unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] will withhold his objection, I would like to make a statement.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. If I can reserve it further, I will do so.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from Kentucky having time to make a statement?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Reserving my right to object.

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, this morning I introduced into the House a bill amending that portion of the appropriation bill passed on the 30th of June, 1906, which authorizes the erection of this monument to General Grant in the Botanical Garden. The amendment proposed is that in the erection of the monument those historical or other trees planted in such grounds shall not be moved or in any way disturbed. I simply want to add to the statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] as to the importance that this matter be delayed until Congress can have opportunity to express its will. Certainly whatever may be said as to the original authorization of the erection of this statue in the Botanical Garden, no one will deny that at that time it was never contemplated that the condition that now confronts us would occur. No one for a moment thought that in the erection of the statue there would be a destruction of these famous trees. And while nobody, certainly no one from my section of the country, would want to do anything in the slightest degree to prevent the erection of a proper memorial to that great general of the civil war whom the South remembers as a generous victor and as a most generous President to that section of the country, still we do believe that a proper recognition of his memory can be had without the destruction of a great historic tree planted by a great Kentuckian, and we hope that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH], in his desire to see progress made with this memorial to General Grant, will not force a situation that will necessitate the destruction of the Crittenden peace tree. It has been suggested that that tree could be removed. To remove it, however, practically means to kill it. Its size and character render such removal simply a method of killing, and the resolution offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] simply stays the matter until Congress can express its will in the premises. I trust that the gentleman will see proper to withdraw his objection.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I must insist upon my objection. It is not my desire to do any of the things these gentlemen seem to believe we desire to do. I want this resolution to go to the Committee on the Library, where it belongs.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Certainly; still insisting upon my objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Has the gentleman any assurance or does the gentleman believe that if we fail to take any action at this time these people will not take advantage of the delay and remove or cut down the tree?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do not believe they will if the delay is not unreasonable; but the contract has been let and damages are already accruing to the contractors. I do not think they are going to wait until next May. This Committee on the Library can act at once, and I think there will be no disposition on their part to cut off action.

Mr. SHERLEY. Would the gentleman withdraw objection if an amendment were made to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] fixing the 1st of March as the date?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will not withdraw the objection under any circumstances.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] think that under the original act providing that this memorial might be located on "unoccupied space" the Commissioners have the right to place it in a space which is occupied with trees and shrubbery and to remove those trees to put the memorial in?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman that when the law provides for erecting a memorial 250 feet in length in the Botanic Gardens in "unoccupied space" and there is no place where there is no tree or shrub for 250 feet in a straight line, I think that the law meant that trees and shrubs were not occupants of space.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman is mistaken. There are places in the Botanical Garden, and there were plenty of places in it at the time this bill became a law, that were 250 feet in length.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Not east of Second street.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There are plenty of places without any historic trees like this.

Mr. MCCALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I shall not ask the time of the House to show why this memorial should go where the law now provides it shall be placed. I think I can show it ought to go just where it has been located by Mr. Secretary Root, by Mr. Secretary Taft, by the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library, Mr. WETMORE, and by General Dodge, the greatest survivor of the civil war, and where the family of General Grant want it placed. I do not want to take the time of the House at this time to do that. This resolution has been reported by no committee. I want a hearing by the committee before this order to locate the memorial shall be vacated at the behest of a portion of the people of Washington who—some of them, in my judgment—are seeking other ends than the protection of these trees. I want these trees protected and they shall be protected if I have my way about it. But I am not in favor of passing the resolution, without reference to a committee, removing the memorial from the place where it has been located in accordance with the will of the family of General Grant, and upon the judgment of everybody who has had anything to do with its location under the act of Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This resolution does not remove it; it merely postpones action.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Until next May. It has been located on this ground by action of the Commission created by Congress since the summer of 1903, and now, when the contract is let and the excavation for the foundation is being made, it is proposed to postpone it, without a hearing before the committee. I insist upon my objection. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa objects.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It has been suggested that I have not made myself entirely clear. I wish to state that in my judgment if the committee takes up this resolution in reference to the Grant memorial and proceeds immediately to its disposition before the 1st of February, that the Commission ought not to proceed to destroy any of these trees in the meantime. I do not believe it will, although I disclaim any authority to speak for the Commission in that respect.

The rooms on the first, second, third, and fourth floors of the House Office Building not hereby assigned or reserved shall be subject to allotment to Members of the House, other than the Speaker and chairmen of committees, in the following manner:

On Thursday, the 9th day of January, 1908, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the names of the Members of the House entitled to be allotted rooms shall be called by the Clerk in the order and manner provided by Rule 32 of the House Rules regulating the drawing of seats, and a Member as his name is thus announced may immediately designate his choice of one undesignated office room by giving the temporary number thereof to the Clerk, in accordance with the plats accompanying this resolution. Any Member may be represented in his absence by a colleague. The rooms so designated by Members shall be, and are hereby, assigned to such Members, respectively, as their individual office rooms, and the room assigned to any Member in the foregoing manner or in the manner hereafter provided may be held by such Member so long as he shall remain continuously a Member or Member-elect of the House of Representatives, or until he shall relinquish the same, subject, however, to the control of the House at all times.

Any Member or Member-elect of the House may file with the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds a request in writing that any individual office room be assigned to him whenever it shall become vacant. If only one such request has been made for any room which shall have become vacant, the room shall be assigned as requested. If two or more requests are made for the same vacant room, preference shall be given to the Member making the request who has been longest in continuous service as a Member and Member-elect of the House of Representatives. If two or more Members with equal length of continuous service make request for the same vacant room, preference shall be given to the one first preferring his request. A Member making request for assignment of a vacant room may withdraw the same at any time, and no Member shall have pending at the same time more than one such request.

The assignment of a new room to a Member, upon his request, or the appointment of any Member having an individual office room as chairman of a committee having a committee room, shall act as a relinquishment by him of the room previously assigned to him.

Members having rooms assigned to them in the foregoing manner may exchange rooms one with another until the 1st day of April, 1908, by giving notice to the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds prior to said date of such exchange, and the rooms so exchanged shall be considered as originally allotted in that manner. Thereafter Members may exchange rooms, but such exchange shall be valid only so long as both Members making the exchange shall remain continuously Members or Members-elect of the House.

The Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds shall keep a record of the allotments herein provided for, exchanges which may be made, requests for vacant rooms which may be filed and the allotment thereof, which record shall be open for the inspection of any Members or Members-elect of the House.

For the purposes of this resolution, Delegates and Commissioners entitled to seats on the floor of the House shall be treated the same as Members.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the resolution which the committee have reported seems to me to speak quite clearly for itself. There are in that new building——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the gentleman just far enough to ask whether this is not a unanimous report of the special committee?

Mr. MANN. It is a unanimous report of the special committee.

There are 410 rooms in the new office building available for office rooms. There are in the House 396 Members, including Delegates and the Porto Rican Commissioner. If we had provided a plan for assigning to each Member of the House, including chairmen of committees, a room in the office building, there would have been no opportunity at all to relieve any of the committees; but in the proposition which we present, providing that the chairmen of committees can not have individual rooms, it is hoped in the end that the committees which have much work to do will be provided with at least two rooms and that those committees which are now assigned in the Terrace will be provided for elsewhere. There are 62 chairmen of committees. Deducting those from the total membership of the House would leave 334. There is one vacancy which will not be filled at once and one which will be filled by the swearing in of the new Member, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Slemp], immediately after the holidays. We have assigned and reserved of these office rooms 73. In the first place, 36 rooms to 17 committees. There are four rooms assigned to the committee stenographers. One room is a large general committee room, where any committee may have hearings when a very large number of people are to be heard. There are, in addition, reserved 32 rooms, 30 of these being intended as possibly for committees in the future. There are two rooms which we thought better to reserve in connection with the dining room, that we might have two private dining rooms, in case a delegation desired to have a luncheon by themselves. That will leave 337 rooms for allotment among the 334 Members of the House, outside of the chairmen of committees. So that the last person who has the choice of a room under the plan we present will, in fact, have a choice of one out of five rooms.

It is interesting, possibly, in this connection, Mr. Speaker, to recall to the House the fact that a hundred years ago the House of Representatives first occupied permanently the hall where now is Statuary Hall. It is fifty years ago on the 16th of this month, the day the committee presented this report, that the House first met in this Hall. This illustrates the growth of the country and of the House.

Now, under the proposition which we present, Mr. Speaker, the drawing of the rooms is very much the same as it is for the drawing of the seats. You will notice the large plats in front, a plat of each floor of the building. It is proposed to have these plats mounted on boards, put on frames, so that they will easily be reached by any Member of the House, both with his eye and with his hand. It is proposed to have the names of Members drawn in the same manner that they are now drawn in the selection of seats, and as a Member's name is drawn he walks to the front and writes across the room on the plat his name, or directs the clerk who will be there for that purpose to write the Member's name. Members can thereby if they have a choice, if they have a preference and there is any room left which they prefer, exercise that preference. They can also tell when Members have drawn ahead of them the rooms which they have drawn. It will enable many Members of the House to get rooms which will be, or can be, connected with each other if it be desirable, as I think likely it will be. We may have marked on the plats those rooms now connected by doors, but the building is so arranged that any two Members having any two rooms adjoining can have them if they desire connected by a door being put through overnight, the arrangement being left for that purpose.

Under the proposition which we present the choice of the room is in the first instance by lottery or by chance so far as the right of choice is concerned. But we also present a proposition which provides that thereafter Members who have drawn their rooms as long as they remain Members of the House shall retain the rooms which they draw unless they voluntarily relinquish them, and as rooms become vacated they will be assigned to Members who make requests for them and where more than one Member makes a request the Member the longest in continuous service shall have the preference, and where two Members of the same length of service make a request the one first making the request shall have the preference.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask whether the committee considered the plan of allotting these rooms in the new office building to delegations by States? A Member of Congress is more interested in the other Members of his own State than anyone else. I would like to know whether the gentleman's committee considered that in the assignment of these rooms, whether it would not be more advisable to have the members of each delegation located near each other.

Mr. MANN. We did consider that, and the gentleman will see in a moment that it is wholly impracticable to do that unless the committee itself should report to the House the rooms which are to be occupied by each delegation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Would it not be possible to let each State draw and have the selection according to the order of the drawing.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will allow I will endeavor to make it plain. If New York should be drawn first, it would be easy for the State of New York to select its number of rooms consecutively, but if New York should be drawn last there would be no place in the building where there would be that number of rooms on the same floor, much less alongside of each other; and the same would be true of a majority of the delegations. If the gentleman's State, Alabama, should be drawn half way down, the chances are that he would not find ten rooms located near each other without any obstruction between them. If it were possible to locate them, letting the large States draw first and select theirs, and then the smaller delegations draw last, the gentleman's suggestion might be practicable; but because it is not possible to do that, because it is not possible to foresee that New York, Illinois, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Missouri, or the other larger delegations, would be drawn first, the plan seemed impracticable.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman why the committee gave preference to seniority in a subsequent allottment of the rooms—what actuated the committee?

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, we thought that after the original drawing took place, it was impracticable to have a new drawing every term of Congress to begin with; that if a Member had a room and had his library and papers in that room, he would not wish to change the room at the beginning of every term of Congress, so that it was not desirable to have a new drawing at the beginning of every term of Congress.

Mr. MURDOCK. But I think the gentleman misunderstands my question.

Mr. MANN. Oh, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will pardon me, I will answer the question.

Mr. MURDOCK. But the gentleman has not answered it as yet.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman's question. Mr. Speaker, I have explained why we did not provide for an allotment at the beginning of each term of Congress. That leaves a certain number of vacant rooms as the Members go out from term to term, and we thought—and the reason, it seems to me, appeals to everybody—that in making the assignment of these vacated rooms it was right to give preference to those who were the longest in continuous service. The reason for that appeals to me. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] is as well informed upon the conditions as I am. He may have his opinion and I may have mine. It is for the House to determine. We thought our resolution to provide the best plan, because it could in no wise injure the new Members of Congress coming in. They make their requests for assignment of rooms. There will be a room for every Member-elect after each preceding term is ended. That Member may come here under this proposition and make his request as a Member-elect and obtain the room which he requests without difficulty, unless he desires to take the best room in the building that some other Member wants who has longer service, in which case he will not obtain it.

Mr. Speaker, it will frequently occur that two Members desire to have rooms adjoining. In course of time one Member may manage to get a room vacated adjoining another Member's room where he desires to have his room next to the other. This will permit that in course of time, without doing any injustice to new Members, without discrimination in any way against the new Members, and it seems to me that is a fair protection to the membership of the House.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. MANN. With pleasure.

Mr. MURDOCK. If it is just in the one instance, the subsequent allotment, why is it not just, then, to distribute these rooms by seniority in the first place?

Mr. MANN. Oh, it would be just, Mr. Speaker, but it is not practical.

Mr. MURDOCK. It is not just, with one-third of this membership new, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas with pleasure, and I am mighty glad to see him back in the House. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it was my bad fortune to get a seat on the rim of the semicircle, and I am remote from the portion of the House that legislates, therefore I could not hear what the gentleman is stating. The question that I desire to ask is, Is this proposition to change anything contained in the proposition printed in the RECORD recently?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; this is the proposition that was printed in the RECORD.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. And no change is made?

Mr. MANN. There is no change made.

Mr. KEIFER and Mr. SULLOWAY rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I only wanted to ask whether the committee had taken into consideration the question of the power of the Sixtieth Congress to fix a rule that is to apply to the Sixty-first.

Mr. MANN. We did, Mr. Speaker. It is perfectly patent, I may say to the gentleman from Ohio, that if the resolution we recommend shall be adopted by the House, it will not bind the Sixty-first Congress, but if the resolution be adopted by the House, I think I am safe in saying that your committee will feel that it is practically directed to bring into the House a bill which will put that portion of the resolution into a law and which will preserve the rights as against the Sixty-first Congress and establish the method of the distribution of the rooms. Of course that is for future consideration of the House.

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman will allow me just a moment, I want to say that I am not opposing the resolution. I think it is impracticable to attempt to regulate the matter beyond the present Congress, and I think that it ought not to be taken by the committee as the wish of the House that we should have a law that would fasten any rule upon the House with reference to its committee rooms or to the assignment of offices to Members. I therefore wish to say, I do not want an interpretation to be put upon these resolutions for adoption that the gentleman suggests.

Mr. MANN. No; but let me make this suggestion to the gentleman in that respect. I think everyone in the House will agree that when they return at the beginning of the Sixty-first Congress——

Mr. KEIFER. If they come back——

Mr. MANN. They will want to go to the rooms which they had in the Sixtieth Congress. They will not want to have all of their papers taken out and moved into another room merely on account of another drawing of rooms. Now, if the gentleman will indulge me, my suggestion has been that if this resolution passed the House we will endeavor to have through legislation a provision as to these rooms subject at all times to the control of the House. Undoubtedly we would not enact any legislation which would endeavor to take away from the House itself the control of the rooms over there, if it so desired, by resolution or rule.

Mr. KEIFER. I think, then, no legislation will be necessary.

Mr. MANN. But legislation seems to be necessary. You have no way of allotting rooms without it. I now yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire of the gentleman if the room now occupied by the Committee on Invalid Pensions is disposed of?

Mr. MANN. It is not.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Very, well; if it had been I wanted to object or move to amend the proposition.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield very gladly.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I only want to say a few words. The committee has been exceedingly generous to the Committee on Military Affairs in the assignment of rooms, and there have been several discussions in regard to the matter between myself and other members of the Committee on Military Affairs and this committee, and I was informed that that matter could remain open until the time came to decide it, and if agreeable to the committee it would be permitted to remain in, or otherwise such action as might be desired could be taken. After a very full conference with the members of the committee, in which all the advantages of abundant and splendid rooms were considered, with the disadvantage of the large amount of business coming before that committee, which causes the membership of this House to come there to look after their bills more often than before any other committee of the House, and in view of the fact that at the closing part of the session conference reports are the order of the day and we have large and voluminous papers to handle, the consensus of opinion of those now composing the Committee on Military Affairs was that while we had need of more room it would be ill-advised and inconvenient and not for the best interests of our business to move, and I hope the gentleman from Illinois will move to strike out the part referring to the Committee on Military Affairs and permit us to remain in the little quarters we have occupied for the last forty years.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will pardon me again. I hope the gentleman will not ask to have that motion made and let the resolution go through as it is, and I assure the gentleman that unless a certain contingency arises we will be very glad to report in favor of moving him back. This is the situation. The committee desires very much indeed that which every Member of the House desires to see done, to give a reasonable amount of space to the Speaker of the House. We all know now that the Speaker has no private room. No Member has an opportunity to talk privately with the Speaker. The Speaker, the Clerk at the Speaker's desk, and the Speaker's secretary all occupy a small room, smaller than most of the committee rooms of the Capitol, at times without ventilation, and it is wholly bad for one's health. I do not undertake to say whether we would desire in connection with that question to make use of the room now occupied by the Committee on Military Affairs. The plans which we had hoped to work out have not yet worked out, and would not the gentleman be perfectly willing to leave the resolution as it stands, and if in the end the Committee on Military Affairs says that it does not desire to occupy these rooms in the new building, as far as I am concerned, I would be in favor of a report restoring the gentleman's committee to the room which it now has, and I have no doubt that would be agreeable to the House. Unless it came to the point where we would endeavor to seize the gentleman's room, which I think will never occur——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, my understanding, Mr. Speaker, is that there has been no disposition on the part of the committee of which my friend is chairman to arbitrarily deal with any committee in any way and that that committee has exercised good taste and judgment in trying to harmonize all wishes.

I will say further to my friend from Illinois that personally I have been very much inclined to say that we had better go over and submit to the inconvenience than to be as inconvenienced as we are for want of room. But in looking the matter over and talking it over with some of the older members of the committee, who have been here a long time, I felt that I could very properly say to the gentleman that the Committee on Military Affairs desire a room where it is convenient, and in conversations that I have had both with one of the distinguished members of the Committee on Military Affairs, who is on this special committee, and with the distinguished chairman, that there will be no trouble about it if we make up our minds in that way.

Mr. MANN. I will say further to the gentleman——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I wish to say just one word more on that proposition. Rather than to pass the resolution and let us stay where we are, or let it be effective, if the committee so desires, or pass another resolution, would it not be better just to drop out for the present? After further consideration, if they can effect the arrangement as the gentleman has outlined to me and as hinted at in the House, it is sure to put in another resolution that would move the committee. And I would not stand in the way of giving the Speaker of the House all of the room for the transaction of business that he needs. Why not leave this matter out now and pass this resolution without it?

Mr. MANN. The committee has not endeavored to compel any committee to go over to the new building. I am of the personal opinion, after having been over in the new building as much as I have been—and I suppose I have been there oftener than any other Member of the House, owing to the position which I occupy on this committee—that every committee that does not go into the new building will greatly regret it—that is, if it has the opportunity to go there. I have no doubt in my own mind that the new building will be the place where the committees will want to be and where the Members will be. But we have not endeavored to force any committee to go over. We have assigned, for instance, in this report, four rooms to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and four rooms to the Committee on Military Affairs. The Committee on Invalid Pensions have a little bit of a room down here, where the Members are put together as close as sardines in a box. We have made no assignment of the room of the Committee on Military Affairs in this report, and if after further consideration they prefer to stay in the room which they now occupy, I am satisfied that our committee will gladly make provision for that in the future, and if this is stricken out now the rooms may not be there in this order hereafter.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The discussion thus far, as it seems to me, makes it possible that some of these rooms that have been assigned to committees will not be occupied by those committees, and as I understand it the whole front tier of rooms on the second floor have been set apart and not assigned. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman if he has considered what is to be done with these rooms if they are not to be occupied by the committees. Can they be reassigned to the Members of this House who prefer them to the offices which they may select; and if so, how are they going to get them?

Mr. MANN. That would remain within the control of the House and within the report of the committee. But let me say to the gentleman that there are a number of committees still down in the Terrace.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What are you going to do with the rooms there?

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly most of those will prefer to come out of the Terrace. The rooms there, or the most of them, are not fit rooms for any committee to be in, owing to the fact that they often become leaky and damp. They are not healthy rooms.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Just in connection with that question, let me ask what is going to be done with the rooms over in the new building if they are not occupied?

Mr. MANN. We will endeavor to work it out. For instance, there will be a stationery room provided in the new building, and there will undoubtedly be a branch library provided there. Just where these rooms will be located we can not say.

We propose to reserve these north front rooms for two reasons. The first is that the north front will be less desirable to enter into at this time, owing to the fact that it is the last portion of the building to be completed; and, second, these rooms are longer rooms than the others.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What I was after, if the gentleman will permit me, if there are any left over that are more desirable rooms for office rooms in that building, how are the Members going to get those rooms?

Mr. MANN. Well, of course, the committee having charge of this can at any time report, and these rooms might be assigned to Members.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That will be a matter that will hereafter be submitted to the House if that emergency should arise.

Mr. MANN. Of course any assignment of these rooms will be submitted to the House. We have no power to assign them otherwise.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. One word more. I understand the gentleman to say that the adoption of this rule will not necessarily involve the change from the one room now occupied to the acceptance of the other in the new building.

Mr. MANN. We do not propose to force the gentleman over there if the gentleman does not want to go.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, it is not a case of "the gentleman," but of the committee.

Mr. MANN. Well, I meant the committee.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. What I want to ask the gentleman is, If the House adopts this resolution, is not that an order of the House that we must go over there?

Mr. MANN. That you must go to the rooms that are allotted; that is right. But the order of the House could be changed. If our committee had known that gentlemen wanted to retain the rooms they have, they would not have provided otherwise. But my notion is that when the Members go over there they will want your committee there. If the committee do not want to go over there, I will, as far as I can, give them an opportunity to keep this cubbyhole they now occupy.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Now, some gentlemen on the Military Committee want to hold the room that they now have and some others of the committee think that they do not. It is believed that by the adoption of this resolution the committee would have to go over there, and they feel that it would be better to have this whole matter left open, so that they may have an opportunity of seeing whether they want to go over there or not. I have no objection to its being passed at this time, with the understanding that if the Committee on Military Affairs objects to going over there, they will be able to retain the room they have.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman insists, I would myself offer a motion to strike out the Committee on Military Affairs; but I think it is better for the Committee on Military Affairs to adopt the suggestion which we have made.

Mr. SCOTT. I understood the gentleman to say, in reply to the gentleman from Iowa, if this resolution is adopted, so far as committees assigned to quarters in the new building are concerned, they will be required to vacate their quarters in the Capitol. That is, I understand, the meaning of the phrase "except where intent is otherwise shown." The adoption of the resolution releases rooms now occupied by the committees named "except where intent is otherwise shown." It seems to me that that phrase was intended to cover the case of committees that might not want to go to the new office building, but use this building, and would not be required to vacate their present quarters.

Mr. MANN. On the contrary, the "intent" is that which is shown in this report.

Mr. SCOTT. I am glad to have that fact brought out.

Mr. MANN. The committee has endeavored to work out a plan by which the committees of the House can either have more room in the new building or more room here; but if they all remain here, of course it is impossible to provide them with additional room. If no other gentleman desires to occupy further time, I desire to offer some committee amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL). The gentleman from Illinois submits the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 1 by striking out in lines 12 and 13 the following: "to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, room 106." And by inserting on page 2, after line 10, the following: "to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, room 206."

Page 2, lines 24, 25, and 26, strike out the words, "three hundred and six, three hundred and seven, three hundred and eight, and three hundred and nine," and insert in lieu thereof the words "three hundred and three, three hundred and four, three hundred and five, and three hundred and six."

Page 3, lines 6 and 7, strike out the words "three hundred and fifty-nine" and insert in lieu thereof the words "three hundred and fifty-seven."

Mr. MANN. This makes no substantial change at all.

The amendments were considered and agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I now move to strike out, on page 2, lines 12 and 13, the assignment to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "to the Committee on Military Affairs, rooms 113, 114, 115, and 116."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I further move to amend, on page 4, at the head of line 13, after the words "first floor," the words "rooms 113, 114, 115, and 116."

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, line 12, after the words "first floor," add the words "rooms 113, 114, 115, and 116."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman what disposition he is making of these rooms covered by this amendment?

Mr. MANN. They are reserved.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois how many rooms will be available for occupancy immediately after January 9?

Mr. MANN. I may say to the House that, in my judgment, and it is our expectation, the building will be open for inspection of Members immediately after the reconvening of Congress, so that everyone will have an opportunity to see the building in good shape. The rooms on the west side, the south side, and the east side are now fairly dry and would be perfectly suitable to be occupied to-day as offices; but the rooms on the north side are not ready, and it is not possible to say whether they will be ready and dry enough to be perfectly habitable when the drawing takes place, but we expect that that will be the case, so that all rooms will be in shape to be used immediately after the drawing, which takes place on January 9.

We should have provided for a drawing during this month, but we were informed that if that was done and Members used the rooms which were usable it would delay the contractor and give an excuse for delay, so that the Members would be greatly incommoded for a long time in the future.

Mr. CHANEY. I would like to ask the gentleman how the rooms are furnished—whether they are all furnished alike?

Mr. MANN. The rooms are all furnished alike. They are furnished with two roll-top desks, one being fixed for a typewriter, and a table, a case, and several chairs, including a swivel chair for the Member.

Mr. COCKRAN. Is the typewriter included?

Mr. MANN. The typewriter is not included in the furniture.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The question was taken, and the resolution as amended was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. CAPRON, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House without leaving copies papers in the case of G. W. and A. Cross, Fifty-ninth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 21 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Saturday, December 21, at 12 o'clock noon.
